Fox Names New Group of Specials

Six Productions for Early Issue to Supplement Original Program of Current Season's Pictures

THE Fox Film Corporation announces its intention of releasing a second series of six super-special productions as a supplement to the original program of big feature pictures of the current season. They are for release in January. The pictures are: "The Village Blacksmith," "A Friendly Husband," "Paradise Road," "The Face on the Barroom Floor," "The Net," and "Does It Pay?"

According to the statement, this preparation for release of the second list is the result of the demands made upon the organization by exhibitors who have already benefited from profitable runs with the first group of specials.

Fox states that a large proportion of the important exhibitors in America have already contracted for and played the original set of pictures and are now ready for the additional releases.

"The Village Blacksmith" which is a 1923 melodrama directed by Jack Ford, is based upon the famous poem by Henry W. Longfellow. This, the first production mentioned on the list, recently completed a month's run at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York.

The cast selected includes William Walling, Bessie Love, Virginia Valli, David Butler, George Hackathorne, Gordon Griffith, Tully Marshall and Ralph Yeardsley.

"A Friendly Husband," the feature length comedy starring the agile Lupino Lane, is the second of the series. It was directed by Jack Blystone.

"Paradise Road" is the third on the announced list. It is an adaptation of the widely-read novel, "The Custard Cup," by Florence Livingston Bingham, and was directed by Herbert Brenon.

For the first time, Mary Carr, who is featured, will be seen in a production which is entirely different from the "mother" story which has made her famous. The character of a woman who possesses the rare quality of always seeing the bright things in life and doing all within her power to help others is that of Mrs. Penfield, "Penzie" of the book.

Others in the cast are: Miriam Battista, Peggy Shaw, Ben Lyons, Myrta Bonillas, Jerry Devine, Ernest McKay, Henry Sedley and Frederick Esmelton.

"The Face on the Barroom Floor," which was formerly announced under the title "Drink," was also directed by Jack Ford.

Henry B. Walthall and Ruth Clifford are the leads. Otherh players are Alma Bennet, Walter Emerson, Frederick Sullivan, Novel McGregor, Michael Dark and Gus Seville.

The fifth of the announced series is "The Net," from the story by Maravene Thompson and adapted by Olga Linek Scholl. J. Gordon Edwards will direct the super-special. In the cast are Barbara Castleton, Albert Roscoe, Raymond Bloomer, Alma Bennet and a long list of well known actors.

"Does It Pay?" is the seventh of the new list. Hope Hampton heads the cast, among which are such names as Robert T. Haines, Mary Thurman, Florence Short and Peggy Shaw, the famous Follies girl.

Charles Horan will direct "Does It Pay?" The scenario is by Howard Irving Young.

Atkinson Names Metro Releases

List for Next Two Months Includes Adaptations of Well-Known Dramas

IN a statement issued this week from the Metro Pictures Corporation's home office, General Manager William E. Atkinson announces Metro's line-up of releases for December and January. Among the specialty offerings as outlined in Mr. Atkinson's statement are "Quincy Adams Sawyer," "Peg O' My Heart," "The Toll of the Sea," "All the Brothers Were Valiant," "Hearts Aflame," "Jazzmania," "Calico and Romance," "The Famous Mrs. Fair," and "The Passion Vine." Besides these offerings, Metro will release during the coming months some more of the Bull Montana comedies and of the Star Laurel series. Mr. Atkinson's statement follows:

"Take first 'Quincy Adams Sawyer,' the Metro-SL special. The cast is little short of astonishing: Blanche Sweet, John N. Bowers, Lon Chaney, Barbara La Marr, Louise Frazenda, Hank Mann, June Elvidge, Edward Connelly, Joseph Dowling, Elmo Lincoln and several others as well known. The story is the most famous home-folks romance ever written, Charles Felton Pidgin's novel. The scenario is by Bernard McConville. Clarence G. Badger directed the picture. The picture is clean, it's funny, it's human, and it has the biggest dramatic punch at the climax I've ever seen.

"Right after 'Quincy Adams Sawyer' comes 'Peg O' My Heart,' with Laurette Taylor in the star role. The play itself is undoubtedly the most successful the modern stage has seen. Still being performed, its total number of presentations has passed the 15,000 mark. In play form it has been uniformly a hit, and all doubt as to its faithful reproduction in pictures is dissipated by the fact that the author, J. Hartley Manners, was present at the Metro studios throughout the making of the film. The scenario is by Mark O'Hara, who did the continuity for Rex Ingram's 'The Prisoner of Zenda.' The direction is King Vidor's.

"Metro is privileged at this time, too, to issue a picture which marks as new an era in progress as did the Wright Brothers' flights several years ago. The release is the Technicolor picture, 'The Toll of the Sea,' the first color picture to prove realistic.

"These are but the first of the big ones. Next in line comes Ben Ames Williams' great sea story, 'All the Brothers Were Valiant,' produced by Irvin V. Willat, who has a reputation for knowing how to make sea stories. The cast includes Lon Chaney, Billie Dove and Malcolm McGregor. The scenario is Julian Josephson's. Following this is Reginald Barker's production 'Hearts Aflame,' presenting on the screen perhaps the most remarkable scenes of catastrophe, such as a great fire and an earthquake, ever done. Robert Z. Leonard, who directs Mae Murray and who presents this star's pictures, wires us that the newest one, 'Jazzmania' is going to make 'Broadway Rose,' 'Fascination' and 'Peacock Alley' look like primer stuff. To all intents, too, Fred Niblo's first production for Metro, now being made at the Louis B. Mayer studios, is going to be even better than the play upon which it was founded: James Forbes's New York dramatic hit, 'The Famous Mrs. Fair.' Harry Beaumont has finished directing Viola Dana in a new comedy of youth, 'Calico and Romance,' and it's more than up to the record of earlier ones. And down in Florida, Rex Ingram has about completed the outdoor scenes of his newest, 'The Passion Vine,' from a story of the South Seas, by John Russell. Playing in the picture are Ramon Novaro, Alice Terry, Harry Morey, Edward Connelly and others whose names mean money at the box office."

Plans for the production of this book and stage play were announced this week when it became known that Mr. Tully, who went abroad to attend the opening of "The Masquerader" in London, was in Paris photographing atmosphere scenes of the Latin Quarter for what is claimed will be his most pretentious work.

Out on the coast the Tully organization is actively preparing the ground work for "Trilby" so that as soon as Mr. Tully returns to the coast he will be ready to start filming this big production.

B. P. Schulberg Purchases Two New Stories

Two new stories have been acquired this week by B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, Inc., for release through the Al Lichtman Corporation. These are "The Parasite," by Helen Martin, and "Sunshine Alley."

No information was divulged concerning the nature of the stories or what director would make them. Schulberg's production schedule at the moment is a heavy one. Gasnier is at work on "Poor Men's Wives," while Forman is making "The Girl Who Came Back." Following "Poor Men's Wives," the schedule has not been definitely mapped out. Unproduced material on hand includes "The Broken Wing," "Mothers-in-Law," "A Mansion of Aching Hearts" and "My Lady's Lips."

Bonns Off to Exploit "Broken Chains"

Eddie Bonns, manager of Goldwyn's exploitation department, is off on a trip to Detroit and Chicago to superintend special exploitation campaigns for Goldwyn pictures.

Goldwyn plans a big exploitation campaign for the showing of "Broken Chains" in Chicago in connection with the Chicago Daily News and Mr. Bonns will have charge of it. "Broken Chains" was the prize winning scenario in the Daily News' $30,000 motion picture scenario contest.

Schulberg Buys Rights to "The Broken Wing"

B. P. SCHULBERG, president of Preferred Pictures, Inc. and vice-president of the Al Lichtman Corporation has captured a much-sought piece of theatrical property in the film rights to "The Broken Wing," the play by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard. "The Broken Wing" will be made into a motion picture by Preferred and ultimately released through the Al Lichtman Corporation. No decision has been made as to who will direct it.

The stage version opened at the 48th St. Theatre New York on November 29, 1920, and ran until July 2, 1921. It later went to Chicago where it ran for 12 weeks and then played extended engagements at theatres in Buffalo, Boston, Brooklyn, Washington, Pittsburgh, Baltimore and Toronto.

One of the highlights is an aeroplane crash in which a full-sized 'plane is seen crashing to earth. Schulberg feels that the opportunities offered by this piece of business for reproduction on the screen are invaluable.

THREE Film Booking Offices of America salesmen are now managers of F. B. O. exchanges. These promotions are in line with the policy recently announced by Harry M. Berman, general manager of distribution, of making advancements come from within the ranks of the organization.

L. George Ross, who was formerly a salesman in the New York exchange, is now managing the New Haven branch. William Conn, who is branch manager in Charlotte, N. C., an F. B. NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 725 S. WABASH AVE.

Around the Trade

ARTHUR SCHOENSTADT has returned from a visit to St. Louis friends, with whom he put in many hours on the golf links.

L. J. Bulger, of Marshall, Illinois, has sold his theatre to Mr. Fundis, of the same city.

Frank Rembush came to Chicago for a short visit this week, and, among other things, addressed the convention of Amusement Park Managers, which was in session, and he also conferred with a number of leading theatre men in regard to his fight on the music tax.

Carl Fulton, of the Fulco-Schaffer Supply Company, has returned from New York where he spent several days on company business. Supply houses are doing a much better business than for some time past and exhibitors are showing a much more liberal tone in their buying, according to Mr. Fulton.

Peter J. Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, plans to leave Chicago this week for New York, where he will embark for Europe and a trip around the world. Each year one of the members of the firm broadens his view of the motion picture industry by general observation on a world tour, and this year it is Mr. Schaefers turn. Last year it was Mr. Linick's and the year before, Mr. Jones'. Norman E. Fields, general manager, is at present touring the East observing theatrical conditions in New York, Boston and Philadelphia, on behalf of his firm.

Norma and Constance Talmadge, Buster Keaton, his wife Natalie, their fine baby boy, and Margaret Leahy, the English prize beauty, who is to appear with Norma Talmadge in her next picture, "Within the Law," passed through Chicago last week, en route to the coast, where the various members of the party will soon be back on the lots.

Raymond Hatton stopped off in Chicago, Monday, en route from New York, to the Pacific Coast Studios of Famous Players-Lasky, and made three personal appearances at McVickers theatre. The policy of having all Paramount stars, passing through Chicago, appear personally, is proving a popular one with Jones, Linick & Schaefer's big Madison Street house, and the welcome accorded the actors and actresses, who have thus far appeared, warrants a continuation of this plan indefinitely.

Rosenfield & Hopp interests have purchased the Spencer Square theatre, Rock Island, from Carl Miller and A. Anderson. This gives these well known exhibitors the second first run house in town and it is understood its policy will not be changed.

Clyde Elliott plans to open his new Evanston theatre early next week and the finishing touches on redecorating and furnishing the theatre are being rapidly rushed to completion.

Lawrence Kronstedt, of Galva, has purchased the Star theatre from O. U. Peterson, of Chicago.

The run of "One Exciting Night" at the Illinois will end on December 30th. The showing of this thrilling Griffith feature has been successful at high prices, and the picture has been booked into the Roosevelt, where it will open some time in February for an extended run.

The reform and blue Sunday advocates of Belvidere, Illinois, received a severe set-back as the result of the vote at the recent special election, when 2,038 voted for Sunday entertainment and 984 against. Ministers of Belvidere, some time ago, demanded the special election, when the Apollo theatre, owned by Frank Rhinehart, was opened on Sunday.

Harry T. Leper has sold his Kimbark theatre, located at 6240 Kimbark Avenue, to Charles Fecher and Fred Nortman, who operate the Drexel, Lexington, and Harvard theatres on the south side. The Kimbark is a first-class house with an eight hundred seating capacity.

The Cottage Grove-Woodlawn district continues to grow in importance as one of Chicago's leading amusement centers, the latest announcement being that a new theatre is to be located at the southwest corner of 64th Street and Cottage Grove, which will have a seating capacity of one thousand. The new building will cost in the neighborhood of a million and a quarter, and in addition to the theatre, will house a two hundred room hotel and restaurant. The theatre will face on Cottage Grove Avenue, having a one hundred and forty foot frontage with one hundred and twenty-two feet on 64th Street. The Garden Building Corporation are the promoters of this enterprise.

Duskin, Ben Edelman, Jack Cohen, F. Swanson and John Dromey, service manager.

Final touches are being put on the new Paramount Building at Fourteenth and Wabash Avenue, and it is expected that the move from Ninth and Wabash to the new exchange building, will be made before the end of the year. The new building is planned to give Paramount a Chicago home which will be commodious and convenient in every way.

Jeff Lazarus has accepted a position as director of publicity and advertising for Grauman's Los Angeles theatres and will leave Chicago shortly to take up his duties on the west coast. Mr. Lazarus, for some months past, has been in charge of publicity and advertising at the Chicago exchange of First National, and has made a splendid record of achievement throughout the territory served by the Chicago office. It is understood that Al Sobler will arrive shortly to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of Mr. Lazarus.

Mort Henock, who recently has been working the south side territory for Universal, is now covering the west side in place of Reggie Albers, resigned.

I. Maynard Schwartz, popular manager of Chicago's Educational exchange, produced the big musical show, for the benefit of Mount Sinai Hospital, which was put on at the Congress Hotel, on the nights of December 12th, 13th and 14th. Mr. Schwartz is widely known in the city's musical and dramatic circles, as one of the ablest directors and is responsible for many of the successful charitable and fraternal affairs of the last few years.

Eddie Silverman, of Select, reports "One Week of Love" is meeting with great success. It has been booked into fifty-six Chicago houses for the week of January 15th, the date set for the general release of this popular feature. It already has been shown with success at the Tivoli and Riviera and proved a good box office attraction at the Castle and Barbee's where it was put on for a double loop run this week. A big twenty-four sheet billboard campaign is planned in connection with the general release, and the paper scheduled to be posted throughout Chicago by Christmas day.

Manager Reingold, of Goldwyn Pictures Chicago exchange, has added Salesman Hurchman, formerly of the Salt Lake City exchange, to his staff.

Exploitation Manager Eddie Bonns, of Goldwyn Pictures, is scheduled to arrive in Chicago the latter part of the week. While here he will confer with Local Exploitation Representative Walter D. Nealand, on the expansion of the work in the local territory, as it is Goldwyn's plans to give even greater assistance to exhibitors along this line, than in the past.

Claude Saunders, Paramount exploitation chief, passed through Chicago last week on his way from the coast and expects to return to Chicago from the east at Christmas time for a fortnight to visit with some of his old pals.

Universal Film Exchange held a special trade showing of "The Flirt" at the Randolph theatre this week, and a large crowd was on hand to view this picturization of Booth Tarkington's popular novel. It was the opinion of those who viewed "The Flirt," that Universal has in it one of the best features ever put out by the company.

Paramount's new Peoria exchange at 113 S. Monroe Street, that city, was opened last week with Milton Hirsch in charge. Four salesmen, well known in Chicago film circles, will work out of the new exchange, and Jack Frost is its booker. The salesmen are William Washburn, Bill Carmichael, L. C. O'Connor and A. W. Frieml.

Herman Stern, of Universal, has changed the days of the weekly trade showings from Friday afternoon to Tuesdays at 1:30.

"Go-to-Theatre" Week Adds to Exhibitor's Business

Dresden, Ontario.—The Majestic theatre, which has been running only four nights a week, on the strength of a special exploitation campaign opened for six nights a week.

Each night was made a special feature. The opening night, during which a picture starring Norma Talmadge was run, was featured as "Ladies' Night." Flowers were given away to attending ladies as souvenirs with a card attached, presumably from Miss Talmadge and with her compliments.

Tuesday night, termed "Club Night," was a new appellation for the old-time amateur night. The difference was that the performance that marked part of the program with the picture was conducted under the auspices of various clubs and societies.

Wednesday night, popularized as "Jazz Night," was marked by balloons, kazoos and community singing.

On Thursday night two vaudeville acts were imported and the evening was appropriately known as "Vaudeville Night."

Throughout the first four days of the week interest was worked up in the Friday event, which was called "Contest Night," a contest having been run earlier in the week to determine the most popular young man and lady lady in town.

Saturday night was dedicated to out-of-town visitors. It was the time that farmers from the outlying districts took a holiday from the plow and threshing machine and came to town. The theatre capitalized the fact by making a special bid for their patronage.

Window tie-up on "Sherlock Holmes" obtained by the Majestic theatre, Tulsa, Okla. The card ties up the comfort of caps with Sherlock Holmes, who wore one

Blank Booklet Is Effective "Nero" Ad Stunt

VINCENNES, Ind.—The management of the Pantheon theatre distributed 4,000 booklets in advance of the showing of "Nero." These were about two by three and a half inches in size, and the covers were of red and blue paper. The front cover read: "What I Know About Women" by Nero. The four inside pages were blank.

The picture opened on Sunday and on Friday a special showing was held for the ministers, public officials, officers of the Rotary, Kiwanis and other civic clubs, school officials, president of Vincennes University, Historical society, etc. Saturday's papers carried their opinion of the picture. This created a great deal of interest in the city.

"Sherlock Holmes" Campaign is Varied in Nature

Atlanta, Ga.—Manager A. H. Patterson of the Metropolitan theatre, assisted by Goldwynner Jimmie Carrier, put over a thorough exploitation campaign on "Sherlock Holmes."

Two hundred and fifty cloth signs, about 12 by 40 inches, were placed on the backs of taxes, jitney buses and all cars carrying passengers to the big fair. To obtain this publicity, which covered the entire city, called for no expense aside from the printing of the signs, as the taxi companies gave the privilege of placarding their vehicles in return for a slide advertising their concerns and a few passes.

The largest department store in Atlanta, J. M. High & Co., was easily sold on the idea of furnishing Manager Patterson with ten large pieces of Neponset which were placed on the sidewalk at ten of the busiest spots in Atlanta. A sign, which could be read from both ways of approach was painted on each of the ten strips. It read: "See it now 'Sherlock Holmes.' Metropolitan theatre." Underneath that in smaller letters, the department store was advertised—"Neponset, J. M. High & Co."

Two little wagons, with teams of billygoats, carrying banners on each side advertising the picture, were driven by boys at the head of the circus parade on the opening day of the picture.

A special screening was given for the "Better Films" Committee of Atlanta and for city officials.

"Which Man?" Contest Used to Exploit "The Storm"

Hamilton, Ohio.—Manager Fred S. Meyer of the Palace theatre, aided by Joe Mayer, Universal exploiteer, recently put over a newspaper tie-up campaign for "The Storm" that created great town talk.

Mayer arranged with the Hamilton Daily News to run a "Which Man?" contest, based on the perplexing problem of the young Canadian girl in the picture who is torn between her regards for two men, one a son of the forest and the other a product of the drawing rooms.

The newspaper lined up solidly with the Palace theatre and jumped into the contest with both feet. It was first announced by a series of tricky teaser ads scattered through the newspaper a week preceding the opening of the picture, and then followed with deep three-column boxes describing the contest in full and used on the first page of the paper on the four days immediately before the opening.

The result was an avalanche of replies, people of all ages and from all walks of life contributing their ideas of which man Manette should choose.

Application of the "wink" idea, used by the Garden theatre, Davenport, Iowa, during the engagement of "East is West." The girl gave out lichee nuts to those entering the theatre

Striking lobby material prepared by Manager J. M. Edgar Hart of the Palace theatre, El Paso, Texas, on "A Tailor Made Man"

Teaser Ads and Essay Contest Boost "Rags to Riches"

Youngstown, Ohio.—For several days in advance of the showing of "Rags to Riches," the management of the Liberty theatre ran a number of teaser ads in the local dailies. The ad contained the names of nationally known men who rose from "Rags to Riches"—Thomas A. Edison, the world's greatest inventive genius, rose from "Rags to Riches"; John B. Duke, tobacco king, rose from "Rags to Riches," etc.

Following the use of the teaser ads, the Youngstown Vindicator launched a contest for school boys and girls and awarded prizes for the best essays based on the title, "Have all school boys and girls an equal opportunity to acquire riches?" This was supplemented by an old clothes week, and all those who brought bundles of worn garments to the theatre were admitted free. The clothes were sold to junk dealers and the funds were turned over to a charitable organization.

The Strand, Syracuse, N. Y., inaugurated a newspaper campaign, and in conjunction with the Times a party was given to the local newsboys. Considerable newspaper space was secured by this stunt.

The DeLuxe Film Company of Philadelphia used this street ballyhoo to exploit "More To Be Pitied Than Scorned" at Fay's theatre

Teachers' Matinee Exploits "Man Who Played God"

SEATTLE, Wash.—When John Hamrick played "The Man Who Played God" at his Blue Mouse theatre here recently, Exploitation Manager Vic Gauntlet started the picture off well and assured its advertising in educational circles by his "Teachers' Matinee!"

One thousand teachers in the local public schools attended the first showing of the George Arliss feature as part of the exploitation and advertising program.

Teachers were picked out by Mr. Gauntlet because he believed that the picture was one that would have an appeal to that class of the public. It was believed that the word-of-mouth advering that resulted from the stunt more than justified the original expense to put the matinee across.

"Blind Bargain" Victim Brings Space in Newspapers

NEWARK, N. J.—Manager O'Crowley, of the Strand theatre, and Bonns and Ferguson, of the Goldwyn exploitation department, obtained first page stories under two column heads for "A Blind Bargain" through an ingenious "plant."

Early morning workers discovered a bundle of clothes lying on the bank of the canal at the Dickerson street bridge. Police were rushed to the scene. In the pocket of the navy jacket was found a pocketbook containing nine cents and a cigar, and also a letter hastily scratched with a lead pencil on a torn sheet of paper. The note read:

"I entered a blind bargain with Dr. Lamb on his promise that, through an operation making use of a monkey gland, youth and health would be restored to me. He failed, and this is the result.—Robert Sandell."

Early editions of the News and Star-Eagle carried long stories about the discovery of the clothes and the search being made by the police for the body. Later editions "kidded" the whole affair, suggesting that the writer of the note was probably looking on while the police searched for his body. Nevertheless, it got a lot of space and much publicity for "A Blind Bargain."

Beauty Contest Tied Up As Aid to "Eternal Flame" Showing

Green Bay, Wis.—Manager Frank Cook of the Strand theatre, through a tie-up with the town's best photographer, was able to get the leading beauties of Green Bay to pose for photographs and allow their pictures to be used as entrants in a local beauty contest that was part of an exploitation campaign in "The Eternal Flame."

The manager handled the details himself. Securing the names of the six desired clients for the photographer, he called them up and invited them to participate in the contest. Assured of six entries and six whose friends would probably join or take an interest in it, he went after the newspapers hard. The photographer, in return for the advertising it gave him, photographed the original six without cost.

At the same time the beauty idea was tied up with a Norma Wave story in the papers, to obtain the co-operation of beauty parlors featuring this style of hair dressing.

A notable incident of the campaign was the fact that the librarian, for the first time on record, sanctioned the placing of a sign in the lobby, "'The Eternal Flame,' with Norma Talmadge, coming to the Strand, in an adaptation of 'La Duchess de Langeais.'"

Radio receiving set installed in lobby of the Palace theatre, Brooklyn, by Manager Edelhurst for "The Radio King." It actually worked

Front closed in with beaver board, with liberal use of butterflies in decoration, at the Liberty theatre, Yakima, Wash., for the showing of "Rich Men's Wives"

"Smilin' Through" Tied Up to English Elections

LONDON, ENG.—Whoever said England was behind the times in exploitation wasn't just exactly up to the minute himself. For in the political campaign just closed, candidates for Parliament wore buttons on which were printed "Smilin' Through," and handed these buttons out in their constituency and what they didn't supply the First National, which released the Norma Talmadge picture, did.

The First National also tied-up with the Underground and had signs placed in the cars reading: "Safety first, but keep smilin' through."

Another English stunt was the formation of the "Smilin' Through Society" throughout the country. The subscription was a smile a day, payable to your fellow worker.

In the big cabarets the song "Smilin' Through" was sung by a man and a woman dressed to represent Norma Talmadge and Wyndham Standing. Murray's Club in London held a special "Smilin' Through" night, October 26. Queen's Hall Roof made a special number of the song.

During the election campaign, too, First National put out one-sheets on which was a picture of Norma, and the words: Vote for Norma Talmadge and Keep Smilin' Through.

Bulletin board, with broadside and appropriate clippings, used in lobby of the Alamo theatre, Louisville, Ky., on "Notoriety"

Hospital Showing Wins Space for "Skin Deep"

DENVER, Colo.—The Colorado theatre obtained abundant publicity for its run of "Skin Deep" through a special screening of the picture for invalided war veterans and the personnel of the government's Fitzsimons General Hospital.

The one page Daily Bulletin issued at the hospital contained a large announcement of the showing and emphasized the fact that it was being made prior to a run of the picture at the Colorado theatre.

Two showings were given at the hospital, one for patients and a second for the personnel. The fact that members of the staff and some of the patients were able to circulate around town freely gave the picture abundant word of mouth advertising in addition to the newspaper notices it received.

Front Page of Newspaper Made "Manslaughter" Herald

A. Mike Vogel, Paramount exploiteer, immediately bought several hundred copies and had them imprinted with an ad for the picture at the Cameraphone. Single page reprints of the page, with a mortise in the centre for advertising, have been made up as a special herald, and have been used by other theatres in and around Pittsburgh

Humane Society Boosts Showing of "Just Tony"

Winnipeg, Canada.—"Just Tony" was given an effective boost when it played the Province theatre by the Winnipeg Humane Society.

The directors of the society were given a special showing of the picture, and they returned the courtesy by writing the management a letter which expressed their appreciation, and praised the picture because of the intelligent horse taking part in it.

This endorsement naturally carried a great amount of weight in the city, and greatly aided in stirring up interest in the showing of the picture.

Wedding Ring Stunt is Used on "Man, Woman, Marriage"

SULLIVAN, IND.—Manager H. H. Wilson of the Sherman theatre, in connection with the showing of "Man, Woman, Marriage," unearthed the lost article stunt to excellent advantage.

Ten ten-cent rings were tossed around the city's streets and then advertised for in the "Lost and Found" columns, with a reward if they were returned to Dorothy Phillips, care of the Sherman theatre. The reward was paid—a pass to the picture.

Telephone Exploitation Worked on "A Connecticut Yankee"

Columbus, Ga.—Although he put on an all-around campaign on "A Connecticut Yankee at the Court of King Arthur," Manager I. C. Holloway, of the Rialto theatre, got his best results from a systematic use of the telephone.

This is the way he worked it. The help of the head of the local Red Cross was solicited, and she gave him the names of ten local ladies who were well known and who would co-operate. The telephone directory was divided into ten equal parts and the ladies started picking out the residences, calling them and telling them about the picture that would open at the Rialto the next day. In this way every residence in town was notified and in such a way that no one could take offense.

Manager H. L. Reddington of the Central theatre, La Porte, Ind., obtained a tie-up which gave him this display on "The Old Homestead"

Baby Rattler Distributed as "$5 Baby" Stunt

DALLAS, Texas.—Manager Charles E. Mitchell of the Queen theatre began his campaign on "The $5 Baby" by arranging several tie-ups with local stores selling nursery furniture and baby clothes. Window displays were on exhibition which carried announcements about the picture.

A novelty in the way of a baby rattler was distributed by the theatre at mothers' meetings and luncheons for business men. Attached to this baby rattler was a card that read as follows:

"A Rattling Good Picture." — Viola Dana in "The Five Dollar Baby."

"Ghost Breaker" Lobby Made Up of Numerous Cutouts

Austin, Texas.—An atmospheric lobby was used to good advantage by Manager R. P. Whitfield of the Majestic theatre on "The Ghost Breaker."

It consisted of beaver board cutouts to represent the entrance into a courtyard of an ancient "castle." Through this entrance could be seen a cut-out of Wallie Reid and Lila Lee. Reid is seen crawling out of a trunk with Lila Lee peering cautiously over the edge of the trunk. To the right of this display stock a cutout of Walter Hies, painted to represent a negro.

In the distance behind the cutouts of Lila Lee and Wallie Reid could be seen the "castle." This display was built in sections, in order to give the proper perspective and effects.

"Native Son" Angle Worked on "The Masquerader"

Sandusky, Ohio.—Manager George Schade of the Schade theatre obtained extra newspaper publicity on "The Masquerader" through an item which he discovered in reading the press sheet.

The fact that he discovered in the press sheet that Kenneth Gibson, who was a Sandusky boy, had a part in the picture, was used to good advantage in the newspapers.

News Coincidence Wins Space For "Till We Meet Again"

Boston, Mass.—The fact that Boston was all worked up over the case of Dorothy Gordon, detained in a Waverly, Mass., sanitarium by her guardian, and that this was similar to a situation in the picture, was used to advantage by Jake Laurie in advertising "Till We Meet Again" at his Modern and Beacon theatres.

Mr. Laurie ran ads in the Boston papers, reproducing a newspaper heading, "Heiress Says She Was Tricked by Guardian," and stating that the situation in the photoplay is "The identical counterpart of the story of Dorothy Gordon in her battle for liberty." Marion Bates (Mae Marsh), the girl in the picture, is a young heiress, like the Massachusetts young woman. She is tricked by her guardian, as Miss Gordon claims to have been, and placed in an asylum when entirely sane. According to newspaper reports, relatives of the girl in Waverly hospital are making exactly the same contention in her behalf.

The opportunity for effective exploitation was too good to be overlooked, and Jake Laurie took full advantage of it.

Soloists Inside Organ for "Tess" Musical Number

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—An unusual atmospheric effect was created during the run of "Tess of the Storm Country" by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre, who placed three soloists inside of one of the large organ chambers of the pipe organ.

Hyman conceived this idea to accentuate one of the crucial scenes in the picture where Tess takes Teola's child to the church to be baptized. At this point the three soloists within the organ sang "Holy Night." In the orchestra pit it seemed that the voices came direct from the organ flutes.

The only accompaniment provided for this vocal novelty was the organ itself. The entire number took only four minutes but served to heighten interest in that phase of the picture.

Guessing Contest Exploits "Sherlock Holmes"

LANCASTER, Pa.—The Grand theatre tied up with the Daily Intelligencer for a guessing contest on "Sherlock Holmes" which was somewhat out of the ordinary.

Readers were asked to spell out the title of one of Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes stories from a puzzling combination of letters. The contest ran for four days and the winner each day was presented with a copy of "The Tales of Sherlock Holmes" and two tickets to the showing of the picture, "Sherlock Holmes" at the Grand theatre.

The contest started on October 25 with a double column advertisement in the Intelligencer, explaining the guessing contest. Each day thereafter, until the first day of the showing, the Intelligencer carried a half column story giving the puzzle letters from which the title for that day was to be reconstructed.

Window display of oriental objects tied up with "East is West" for its showing at the Des Moines theatre, Des Moines, Iowa

Effctive use of large cut-outs on marquee of the Strand theatre, Minneapolis, Minn., on "Grandma's Boy"

Telephone Warning Stunt Used to Exploit "The Storm"

Hagerstown, Md.—When "The Storm" played at the Colonial theatre, Miss Hattie K. Merrill, Universal exploitress, broke into the front page of the newspaper with one of her stunts, a variation of the personal telephone call.

"Beware! 'The Storm' is coming!" was the mysterious message that telephone subscribers heard through their instruments. The message affected various persons in various ways, according to the double-column story on the first page of the Hagerstown Daily Mail.

Tie-Up with Merchant Pays for Special Matinee Ticket

Schenectady, N. Y.—When it was pointed out to Manager William Shirely, of the Strand theatre, that it would mean added expense to print special tickets for the reduced-price children's matinee on "Oliver Twist," which he was to give, he promptly remedied the situation.

He went to the retail merchant next door, sold him the space on the back of the tickets for advertising and charged him just enough to cover the cost of the printing.

The extra matinee, even at a slight reduction to the children, spelled profit and filled seats that otherwise would have been empty during the week-day afternoons.

Charges for Heat and Gives Pictures Free

ANNISTON, Ala.—Manager Roy L. Smart of the Noble theatre ran into an uncomfortably cold day when showing "Calvert's Valley." He issued a herald reading:

"This Thrilling Motion Picture Free—Showing Right Now— 'Calvert's Valley' with John Gilbert and Sylvia Breamer—A Big Picture of Mystery and Thrills. Also Eddie Lyons in 'Do You Take—,' the Laugh Film. This big program of high class motion pictures is free. The special music by the Noble orchestra is free. The leather upholstered seats you will find so comfortable are free. But—We will charge you 5-10-20 or 25 cents for keeping you warm 90 minutes on this, the coldest day of winter, and that's cheaper than you can keep warm at home."

Bicycle Parade Aids Opening of "Speed" at Theatre

San Francisco, Cal.—The management of the California theatre used a boys' bicycle parade as one of the means of exploiting the opening of "Speed" at that house.

Each boy was given a large placard bearing a letter, which was attached to his back, and they were then lined up so that "S-P-E-E-D" was spelled over and over.

Special one-sheets were posted on this parade, and it is described as awakening considerable interest in the opening of the picture.

"What's Wrong with the Women" Essay Contest

Memphis, Tenn.—Manager H. B. Clarke, of the Majestic theatre, in exploiting "What's Wrong with the Women?" tied up with the Memphis Press and put on an essay contest based on the title. Contestants were divided into five classes: Married women past 40, single women, mothers under 40, husbands and bachelors.

Total prizes of $50 and forty passes were offered for the winners in all classes. Of this the theatre paid $40 and gave the passes. The newspaper paid $10 and gave the publicity.

'If You Believe It, It's So" Is Made School Yell

Freeport, Ill.—The management of the Lindo theatre, in conjunction with Bill Danziger, Paramount exploiteer, got the high school athletic association to teach the cheering squad this yell:

"Freeport, you can win! Freeport, you can win! Yah! Yah! Yah! Freeport, you can win! If you believe it—if you believe it—if you believe it, it's so!"

The yell was also used as a slogan and a big banner bearing the words was in a conspicuous place on the field and in the snake dance between halves.

Lobby is Dressed as Ship for "On the High Seas"

Atlanta, Ga.—Visitors to the Strand theatre during the run of "On the High Seas" almost literally stepped from Peachtree street onto the deck of a small schooner.

The lobby of the Strand is rounded in shape and around the sides, beginning from the entrance of the theatre, was placed cut-outs of ship railing, with life belts, ropes and other paraphernalia usually found on deck. Back of the railing was a cloth painting of the sea, with the horizon in the distance and the sky rising from that.

The box office was transformed into a cabin and tickets were sold through a porthole, while on either side was exit and entrance to the theatre proper.

Bed Placed in Lobby as Stunt on "Remembrance"

New Bedford, Mass.—Combining an idea of his own with a press book suggestion, the manager of the Capitol theatre worked out a lobby display on "Remembrance" to good effect.

He took the suggestion of a display of a pair of old shoes flanked by new shoes with the line, "The old shoes pay for the new shoes," but instead of getting a window display he placed the shoes in the lobby of his theatre and under a bed.

The bed was placed squarely in the centre of the lobby, with footboard towards the street entrance. Under one side of the bed, at the foot, were the old shoes; at the other side stood a dainty pair of new shoes. Every person who entered the theatre or passed by on the street, stopped to look at the bed standing, ready for occupancy, in the lobby of the Capitol, and perforce read the sign painted across the footboard, "The old shoes pay for the new shoes. See 'Remembrance,' Rupert Hughes' glowing drama of home. Seven days, starting October 15th."

Sprig of Flowers Makes Neat "Forget-Me-Not" Card

BALTIMORE, Md. — An effective throwaway on "Forget-Me-Not" was used in exploiting that picture at the New theatre recently. It consisted of a sprig of artificial forget-me-nots, looped through two holes in a small card.

The interest-value of this simple card was gauged by Leon Victor of Metro's exploitation staff to be high on account of the small percentage of wastage by pedestrians. For all that more than 5,000 such cards were distributed along the busier streets of the city, an inspection of these thoroughfares revealed exactly seventy-five thrown down.

Besides the artificial flowers slipped through the card, there was this notice printed upon it: "Forget-Me-Not." See New York's biggest Hit. Week Monday, November 6" adding the time of performance.

Co-operative Page Ad Put Over on "Grandma's Boy"

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—A tie-up with the Clinton Hill and West Side Citizen-Chat resulted in valuable advertising for "Grandma's Boy" when that picture played Fox's American theatre.

The paper devoted a page to advertisements showing that The Boy prefers Grandma's Bread to all other makes, that if he wanted a six-family house H. & H. could supply him, that Bowlby's was the place to buy Nifty Negligees for Grandma, and that the young man would have a feast if only he drank Creamalt.

Teaser Finger Print Ads Used on "Sherlock Holmes"

CALGARY, Alta.—The management of Allen's Palace theatre used finger print teaser ads to good advantage for several days in advance of the regular advertising of "Sherlock Holmes."

The teaser ads were one column wide and an inch and a half deep. At the left was the print of a man's thumb. The reading matter was brief: "Whose finger print is this? Ask Sherlock Holmes. He will be at Allen's Palace Monday." These teasers appeared in about a dozen places in each issue of the Calgary papers for several days and were followed by half-page ads in the issues for Saturday preceding the first showing.

Manager Personally Announces "To Have and to Hold"

Jacksonville, Fla.—Manager Guy Kenimer of the Arcade theatre, in exploiting "To Have and to Hold," three times daily, starting six days in advance, stepped out on the stage before his audiences and announced the coming of the picture, giving a short sales talk on it. As this had never been done here, it proved a a remarkably effective stunt.

A personal letter of recommendation was sent to every public school teacher, stressing the historical value of "To Have and to Hold," and the fact that it was the production of a novel of literary value.

The football scoreboard for the game between Tech and Florida attracted crowds of people, approximately 10,000. This board is in a conspicuous spot. A 24-sheet was mounted and fastened to the top of the board.

To make sure that this attracted the attention of all, Mr. Kenimer got a dummy moving picture camera and placed it on top of the scoreboard also. Tripod and all was used. A man cranked the machine. This was an attention getter. Mr. Kenimer says all the ladies near the machine looked, posed and were pleasant.

"Hungry Hearts" Given Varied Exploitation Campaign

New York, N. Y.—A campaign which embraced all of central and downtown New York was put over on "Hungry Hearts" for its showing at the Capitol theatre by Howard Dietz, Edward Bonns and W. R. Ferguson, of the Goldwyn home office.

A woman and a boy were hired to dress up in Russian peasant costume, carrying large red hearts on which the showing of "Hungry Hearts" at the Capitol was advertised. They started out on foot in downtown New York on the Friday before the showing and continued to parade the streets for a week.

Three thousand candy hearts, about an inch in diameter, were used in the exploitation in the theatrical district. On one side of the candy heart was printed the following: "No more 'Hungry Hearts.'" These hearts were put into transparent paper bags. Printed on the front of the bag was: "'Hungry Hearts' are calling you to the Capitol; week of November 26th." These hearts were distributed in shops, department stores and to the various Kiddie Clubs.

Five thousand paper shopping bags, with a big red heart on one side, carrying an ad for the showing of "Hungry Hearts" and an equal number of potato sacks, decorated in the same manner, were distributed in grocery and delicatessen shops along Seventh and Eighth avenues and from Forty-second street to Columbus Circle.

Grosset and Dunlap issued a reprint of Miss Yezierska's volume of short stories, "Hungry Hearts," carrying a scene from the film on the jacket, and issued two sets of window cards advertising it.

Police Lend Burglar Tools as "Sherlock Holmes" Display

DETROIT, Mich.—When "Sherlock Holmes" played at the Fox-Washington theatre, the management obtained from the local police department a miscellaneous collection of handcuffs, revolvers, jimmies, black-jacks, and the like.

These were placed in a glass case before the theatre, with a card reading: This exhibit through courtesy of Detroit Police Department. Inside see John Barrymore in "Sherlock Holmes" foil the world's most desperate and notorious criminal.

"East Is West" Is Given Campaign of Unusual Scope

Omaha, Neb.—Manager Harry B. Watts of the Strand theatre put over an all-around exploitation campaign on "East Is West" that seized upon every available angle.

Special attention was given the exterior and interior of the house. House Artist J. Gordon Bennett did his usual artistic oil paintings for the panels, seven feet high, on the outside of the theatre, concentrating on the head of Constance Talmadge.

Usherettes were dressed in Chinese costumes with silk kimonos dangling from their shoulders, and felt slippers beating their noiseless tattooes down the aisles. The main entrance was lavishly arranged with gold drapings and dangling tassels streaming down from the ceiling. Colored lanterns, many of them hand painted, were suspended from the top of the entrance. In place of their regular flashlights, the usherettes carried small Chinese lanterns.

The prologue opened with Silverman's orchestra playing the overture from "Chu Chin Chow." The curtains parted on a scene duplicated from the second reel of the picture where Ming Toy is shown being prepared to go to the auction boat. A back drop showed a setting of Chinese pagodas on the bank of sluggish waters. A fence was across the stage of Chinese flowers at one side concealed a head spot of green thrown on the face of the Chinese singer. This was the only illumination in front of the arch. Behind it Beryl Burton, noted Omaha soloist, was seated in a large wicker chair with all the appurtenances of Chinese atmosphere. Apparently playing a sampan, she sang "The Chinese Lullaby" from "East Is West," bringing to a close the prologue that was both artistic and effective.

"Remembrance" Tied Up with Father and Son Week

Tacoma, Wash.—Excellent publicity for "Remembrance" was obtained by Ralph Winsor, manager of the Colonial theatre, aided by Goldwynner Frank H. Burns tieing up with the Y. M. C. A. in its annual Father and Son Week. The tie-up was with every branch of the Y. M. C. A. in the city and with the local clubs with which it was affiliated in putting across its Father and Son Week—Kiwanis, Rotary, etc. The Tacoma churches also co-operated.

The Y. M. C. A. allowed Manager Winsor to put an announcement in their booklet which was sent out to 5,000 persons. The Colonial ran a slide about the Father and Son Week at every showing in return for the announcement in the booklet.

Fisherman in Oil-Skins Aids "The Storm" Campaign

New York, N. Y.—Manager Krause of the Melrose theatre, a neighborhood house in the Bronx, used a simple street ballyhoo which proved effective on "The Storm."

An outside man was dressed in heavy fisherman's oil-skins, bearing a sign warning of the coming of "The Storm." This man strolled about the streets near the theatre for several days preceding the showing and attracted great attention.

Krause went in for an elaborate front and lobby display, too, using special banners and flats over his marquise, including large cut-out letters spelling the title of the picture.

Cutout letters were used to excellent advantage in this lobby on "My Friend the Devil" at the Rex theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., of which A. C. Cowles is manager

"Hungry Hearts" Club Formed to Exploit Picture

Boston, Mass.—Unique publicity for "Hungry Hearts" was obtained by Charles Winston, Goldwynner, through the formation of a "Hungry Hearts" club.

The twelve girls forming the club are business women, some of them models, some stenographers, saleswomen, etc. Betty McCarthy is given as the organizer. "We get plenty to eat and wear," she is quoted as saying in an article, "but the one thing we long for—real, sincere love—is not forthcoming. We're tired of being treated as pretty toys, playthings. There must be a one-woman man for every one-man woman, and that is the kind of man whose love every member of the Hungry Hearts wants to win."

There is a half-page account of the organization of this club in the Boston Sunday Post for November 26, with most of the rest of the page being devoted to photos of the fair organizers. The headline clear across the page reads: "Boston Girls Who 'Crave Love' Form Hungry Hearts Club." Underneath that is their motto: "We can get plenty of Husbands. What we want is Single Men!" They ban alimony, flirtation and old men.

The title of Goldwyn's film, "Hungry Hearts," occurs scores of times in the article, in the by-laws and in the headlines. When the picture is shown in Boston every reader of the article will at once tie it up with the page story.

"Brawn of the North" Cutout Given Odd Effect

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla.—Manager Tom Boland of the Empress theatre gained a unique lobby display effect in exploiting "Brawn of the North," when he took a cutout of the dog in action and cut out the eyes. In their place he inserted shining green globes of small size. The incandescents were lighted up at night.

The dog's tongue was also removed and a small red, gelatine paper, re-tinted to resemble the surface of the tongue, put in its place. A small flare behind this display made the mouth glow like a real tongue and a "flash" attachment on the wire made the eyes apparently open and close.

Saxophonists Out in Force for "Clarence" Stunt

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—A large portion of San Francisco's saxophonists attended the Granada theatre during the run of "Clarence," through a special saxophone contest, which anyone was allowed to enter without charge.

During the run, the Bulletin, one of San Francisco's dailies, advertised the fact it would present two saxaphones, costing $100 each, to those saxaphonists who played the best during that week. "If you would like one," stated the daily notice, "you have as much opportunity to win as anyone. Select any composition you wish to play. Then notify the house manager and you can play it whenever you desire during that week."

Miniature Display on Table for "Burning Sands"

COLUMBUS, Ga.—Manager I. C. Holloway of the Rialto theatre prepared a miniature lobby display on "Burning Sands" which attracted great attention.

He built a small tent three feet square of black and white material. He put this on a glass top table, covered the floor of the tent with sand and under this sand he had a red globe, giving the effect of "burning sands." The tent was decorated with appropriate settings and in front he had two small cut-outs and a small sign telling of the picture.

Western Union Offices Tie Up With "Remembrance"

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Twenty-seven Western Union Telegraph offices carried a message on "Remembrance" when that picture showed at the Liberty, through a tie-up made by Manager Newman and Goldwynner William H. Branch.

A hand-painted, framed card, about four by six feet, was placed in every window. The card read:

"Remembrance, a son's duty, a lover's privilege, a husband's vow. Don't write—telegraph and go to the Liberty theatre this week for the sake of Remembrance."

By arrangement with the Western Union, 5,000 telegram blanks were obtained and the following message from "Pop" Grout, the leading character in "Remembrance" was printed on them: "Dear Friends: A telegram is the best evidence you haven't forgotten. Send a wire home today to mother, sister, brother and dear old dad. Or to the sweetheart whom you failed to write. Remembrance will pardon many an oversight and you'll know why after you have seen Rupert Hughes' 'Remembrance' at the Liberty theatre, one week beginning Sunday, Nov. 5. It's the sweetest story ever told. 'Pop' Grout."

Paramount Announces "Super Thirty-Nine"

IT was just six months ago that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation made its remarkable and entirely unprecedented announcement of the forty-one Paramount Pictures which it intended to release to the public through the motion picture theatres during the six months following August 1st.

Following a long period of business depression which had been felt quite as keenly in the theatres as anywhere else—a period of hesitation born of fear upon the part of the great majority of producers and distributors of pictures—this bold stroke by the largest company engaged in the production of motion pictures in all the world not only aroused keen public interest but it created a sensation within the industry itself. This sensation was caused not merely by the promises held forth for the future but by the story of what actually had been accomplished.

The plans for that gigantic program of motion picture production had been conceived by Adolph Zukor, president of the company, and Jesse L. Lasky, first-vice-president in charge of production, months before, when the industry as a whole was in the doldrums. It was no time for snap judgment, although the situation called for quick action. "We will go to work at once," said Messrs. Zukor and Lasky, "and in six months we will present to the exhibitors of America a program of productions which, if not all of them are completed, they will be at least planned and provided for down to the last detail."

And they did. The history of "The Famous Forty-One" is now nearly complete. As that first announcement awakened new hope and confidence in the future, so have the finished pictures fulfilled every promise made for them. The record is written in the box-office results scored by "The Dictator," "If You Believe It, It's So," "Nice People," "Blood and Sand," "The Valley of Silent Men," "Manslaughter," "The Old Homestead," "Burning Sands," "To Have and To Hold," "The Young Rajah," "Clarence," "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew" and all the rest, right down the line.

Confident of the wisdom of their policy—a confidence which has been fully justified by the reception accorded those great pictures by the industry and the public—the Paramount executives made no amendment of their previous action. Before the release of the first of the forty-one on the sixth of August, work had actually been started on more than a dozen of the Paramount pictures to be included among the releases of the second six months starting next February 5th.

So now come "The Super Thirty-Nine."

To ensure a continuation of the constant flow of super-pictures to satisfy the demand of a public eager for more of this class of bigger and finer screen entertainment, the immense resources of the Paramount organization were expanded and more perfectly systematized than ever before.

Despite the fact that the Paramount studios in California had been enlarged and production efficiency there had been carried to a point never before reached, it was found that even those facilities, uncqualled as they were by those of any other organization in the industry, were inadequate. It was found necessary to re-open the company's huge studio at Long Island City, which had been closed for many months, in order to accommodate the expanding production. This was done during the Summer and both Western and Eastern producing organizations have been working virtually to capacity ever since.

The staff of writers necessarily had to be increased, for the rights to some of the most valuable literary and dramatic properties had been secured for picturization. No effort or expense has been spared in order to raise the quality and magnitude of the productions contemplated to a standard of realism and entertainment value never before approached.

Pola Negri, the wonderful European star of "Passion" and "Gypsy Blood," was brought to America, where she has made, under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, "Bella Donna," Robert Hichens' great story of the desert.

In order to secure the exact atmosphere called for by Joseph Hergesheimer's sensational novel, "Java Head," Director George Melford and his entire producing unit were brought East from California and sent to Salem, Mass., there to film the important scenes right at the very locale of the story.

Julia Crawford Ivers, while vacationing in Hawaii, wrote a story, "The White Flower," for Betty Compson. When it came time to make the picture, Miss Compson and the entire company were sent to the far-off Pacific islands to work before the very backgrounds the story described.

James Cruze had been assigned to produce a Paramount picture from Emerson Hough's epic of the Great West, "The Covered Wagon." His entire unit, augmented by hundreds of extra players and supplied with trainloads of equipment and supplies, was sent first to Antelope Island in Great Salt Lake, where a real buffalo hunt was staged, and later to a huge ranch in Nevada where a thousand or more Indians had been marshalled for a reproduction of battle between the savages and the heroic emigrants.

To provide the proper atmosphere for the screen version of Rex Beach's great story, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," Alfred E. Green, the director, Thomas Meighan, the star, and the entire company are off to Panama, there to film all of the exterior scenes right where the author gathered the material for his story and laid his plot.

These are but a few of the things that Paramount has done in order to provide America with its entertainment for the remainder of the picture season of 1922-23. Moreover, its own product will be augmented by a number of pictures produced by the Cosmopolitan Corporation, all of which will be distributed through the thirty-six Paramount branch exchanges to the exhibitors and people of the United States.

Publicity the Contact Point with Public : :

INFORMATION that keeps the public constantly apprised of Paramount's activities comes in a steady flow from Paramount's publicity department, headed by Charles E. McCarthy. The machinery of the department is geared to its highest development in situations where publicity is most needed. For instance, a tremendous publicity campaign has attended the American debut of Pola Negri. Comparatively little known before her arrival in America, this European actress has in a few months become the most talked of screen player in the world and her first American picture, "Bella Donna," is being awaited eagerly as one of the biggest screen events of the season.

Moreover the half-hundred other screen stars, directors and leading players appearing in Paramount pictures are being kept constantly before the public in newspapers, magazines, theatre programs, and other forms of publicity.

Sheet music and books are also being utilized to bring them favorably to the attention of new audiences. From your piano Paramount players smile at you from the covers of such popular music as "Singed Wings," "To Have and To Hold," "Burning Sands," "The Young Rajah," "The Old Homestead" and other songs.

From your library table you are reminded of Paramount pictures by the illustrated photoplay editions of such books as "Manslaughter," "Blood and Sand," "When Knighthood Was In Flower," "The Young Diana," "Burning Sands," "Java Head," "The Covered Wagon," "Bella Donna," "Miss Lulu Bett," "The Glimpses of the Moon" and "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

Forty-eight million newspaper readers learn about Paramount pictures each week from the news service issued by the Paramount publicity department, this being the combined circulation of 860 newspapers which have requested a weekly news service.

The Paramount fashion bureau serves 210 newspapers with a mat service illustrated by the gowns worn in Paramount pictures.

Magazine editors are finding the library of several hundred thousand photographs of Paramount players and productions of increasing value to illustrate their pages with circulation-building material.

The home office staff, consisting of Samuel D. Palmer, J. M. Jerauld, Austin Parker and Glendon Allvine, edit and distribute the photographs and text material prepared at the East and West Coast studios.

Exploitation for the "The Super-39" All Set

PARAMOUNT'S Division of Exploitation, under the direction of Claud Saunders, points to the fact that its slogan, "It Has Been Done," has been lived up to in connection with "The Famous Forty-One." Its record of performance therefore is cited as embodying the strongest assurance to exhibitors that they may expect the same kind of cooperation on "The Super Thirty-Nine."

No story of the success of "The Famous Forty-One" is complete without at least a brief story of the activities of this department which maintains a staff of thirty trained showmen scattered throughout the country. The duty of these men is to see that the exhibitor takes in as much as possible on his Paramount productions.

For "Her Gilded Cage," the exploiteers developed a cheap and inexpensive lath work which transformed lobby fronts at little cost. This novel flash worked perfectly everywhere the picture played.

For "Nice People," the exploiteers sold the title to merchants of the town on the angle that "'Nice People' trade at this store," and secured page after page of solid advertising at no cost to the theatre. "Nice People" has probably the largest double-truck record of any picture ever exhibited.

For "Blood and Sand," the exploiteers developed a fake bullfight gag that set every town on its ears. This was just one of hundreds of stunts that put this picture over to some of the biggest receipts in the history of filmdom.

For "Manslaughter," a safety-first tie-up was arranged which secured a civic backing for the theatres, choice locations for billing, free newspaper publicity and advertising and word-of-mouth advertising at practically no additional cost. The soundness of the exploiteers' work is best demonstrated by the fact that the federal police of Washington, D. C., backed "Manslaughter," the first Government cooperation in the history of the national capital. Just before they had refused to cooperate with two other pictures.

For "The Old Homestead," the exploitation men worked up teasers and a system of cooperation which culminated in a real estate agency in St. Louis, spending $3,600 to put the picture before the public. Many other campaigns were executed by the exploiteers which insured a healthy box-office.

This is only to mention work on five of the "41." Other campaigns fully described in the trade papers have boosted receipts on every one of the pictures. For "The Loves of Pharaoh," the exploitation men combatted the prejudice against costume pictures, and showed conclusively anybody will enjoy an historical production, and that such a picture will get many people into the theatre who wouldn't come otherwise.

The Division of Exploitation, under the direction of Claud Saunders knows where it is "at" on the new "39." However, it is not the policy of the department to send exhibitors on a wild goose chase. The stunts will be put into actual operation and if they are good the exhibitors will be informed through the columns of the trade papers and in The Paramount Exploiteer.

Advent of "Super-39" Awaited World Over

THAT no announcement in the motion picture trade throughout the world will be received with greater interest than that given Mr. Lasky's production program for the remainder of the year 1922-23, is the opinion of Emil E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in discussing plans for world distribution of The Super Thirty-Nine.

"Although it will be several months before these forthcoming Paramount specials will be available for foreign distribution," said Mr. Shauer, "we are finding everywhere throughout the world a constantly increasing interest in the future production plans for Paramount pictures.

"The foreign exhibitor is becoming more and more keenly alive to the development of the motion picture industry in this country, and announcements of the sort made by Mr. Lasky at the Los Angeles Paramount convention will be received with particular gratification the world over. Perhaps the most interesting feature of this announcement is the action of the production department in continuing the policy of producing the highest grade super specials. A number of the group of forty-one specials have been released in various parts of the world in the last few months and have met with the most enthusiastic receptions everywhere.

"Perhaps the most striking development in the foreign field during the last year has been the conversion of the leading exhibitors to the policy of screening special productions of the highest calibre. These exhibitors are learning, as has been the case in this country, that their patrons want nothing but the best in motion picture entertainment. For this reason the foreign department welcomes the opportunity to distribute through its own offices and through leading distributors elsewhere the splendid list of thirty-nine Paramount pictures promised by Mr. Lasky for the coming six months.

"During the past twelve months the foreign department has taken particular pains to enlarge its distributing facilities throughout the world to obtain the proper presentation of such great Paramount specials as 'Blood and Sand,' 'To Have and To Hold,' 'Manslaughter,' 'While Satan Sleeps,' 'The Old Homestead,' 'The Impossible Mrs. Bellew,' 'Clarence,' 'Kick In,' 'The World's Applause' and others of the superb forty-one. This policy will be continued during the coming year.

"In France branch offices have been opened in Lille, Toulouse, Bordeaux, Strassbourg, Marseilles, Lyons and Nancy, and the same organization is distributing Paramount pictures from recently opened offices at Brussels, in Belgium; Basle, Switzerland, Algiers, Algeria; Cairo, Egypt, and Constantinople, Turkey, with Adolphe Osso of Paris in charge. In Denmark, Norway and Sweden arrangements were completed for the distribution of Paramount pictures through offices operated by Carl York and Walter LeMat in Copenhagen, Christiania and Stockholm. Ingvald C. Oes is Paramount's representative in these offices.

"On the other side of the world it has become necessary for the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., of which John W. Hicks, Jr., is managing director, to open exchanges at Singapore, Straits Settlements, and Batavia, Java, to take care of the increased demands for Paramount pictures. Recently offices were opened in Tokyo, Japan, under the management of Tom D. Cochrane.

"In Great Britain arrangements have been completed by John Cecil Graham, Managing Director of Famous Players Film Company, Ltd., for the immediate release of four Paramount specials, 'Saturday Night,' 'Bought and Paid For,' 'The Young Diana' and 'The Good Provider.' This policy has met with an enthusiastic reception on the part of the film trade and the public, as it foreshadows the coming of the day when the British release schedule will be brought down to within six or eight months of the American schedule."

Seven Paramount Offices Opened in 1922 : : :

DURING the past year seven new Paramount distributing offices have been opened in the United States, bringing the total number to thirty-six and placing the company in a position to render more efficient service to exhibitors of Paramount pictures than ever before. Of the seven new offices six are fully equipped branch exchanges and the seventh a shipping station which serves an immense though thinly populated territory.

The new exchanges are as follows: Milwaukee, located at 119-121 Seventh St., managed by G. A. Durlam and serving territory in District No. 5; the Maine Exchange, located at 263 St. John St., Portland, Me., managed by J. H. MacIntyre and serving the northern part of District No. 1; Peoria, Ill., at 113 So. Monroe St., managed by M. M. Hirsch and serving the extreme southern section of District No. 5; Columbus, O., at 251 No. Fifth St., managed by Harry W. Dodge and serving Central Ohio in District No. 10; Wilkes-Barre, Pa., at 62 No. State St., managed by E. W. Sweigert and serving the north central section of Pennsylvania in District No. 3, and Sioux Falls, S. D., managed by A. B. Leak and serving the northwestern section of District No. 11.

The shipping station is located at Butte, Mont., at 49 West Granite St., and facilitates distribution throughout an immense part of the Rocky Mountain territory, known as District No. 8.

The entire Paramount exchange system is now at the highest point of efficiency in personnel and physical equipment. In its entirety it is directed by S. R. Kent, General Manager of the Department of Distribution. The country embraces three sales divisions, each in charge of a Divisional Sales Manager with headquarters at the home office in New York, and each having jurisdiction over the District Managers in their divisions who, in turn, are in charge of the several exchanges in their districts.

The machinery of the whole system moves with a minimum of friction, good will permeates the relations between exhibitors and the exchanges and the rendering of prompt and satisfactory service is the one ambition of the entire organization.

Featurettes to Herald "The Super-39" : : :

PRACTICAL visual salesmanship of motion pictures is about to be an accomplished fact. Paramounts' sales featurettes have solved the problem, and for the first time exhibitors everywhere will be afforded the opportunity of seeing on their own screens what they are asked to buy.

It is not always convenient, or even possible, for an exhibitor to attend a screening of a picture before buying it. Even less often is it possible for him to screen what he buys in his own theatre before signing his contract. Moreover, Paramount recognizes the fact that the best of salesmen cannot tell the exhibitor everything he ought to know or wants to know about a picture, especially the larger production that because of its very nature does not represent on its face the same stabilized value that the exhibitor knows he is getting when he buys pictures with stars who have an established patronage at his box-office.

That's the reason for the featurettes. Starting with The Super Thirty-Nine, every Paramount salesman will carry with him a film of necessary length, which will tell the exhibitor, better than he can be told by words, what he would like to know about each of the season's big special productions. It is not a tabloid version of the feature—it is more than that. It tells him not only the picture story in abridged form but it visualizes to him the salient selling points connected with its production. And in addition it shows glimpses of all the big scenes which have been introduced to lend box-office value to the production.

The featurette on the James Cruze production, "The Covered Wagon," may be cited as an example. The film opens with a reproduction of the copy of the Saturday Evening Post in which the story started as a serial. The first page of the story, showing the title and the name of the author, Emerson Hough, together with the manner in which it was displayed to the Post's millions of readers, is reproduced. Then follow quickly one or two of the succeeding installments and then a copy of the book published by D. Appleton & Co.

Next is shown an animated map of that section of the Great West which is the locale of the story. A line is started at Kansas City, which at that time was known as Westport Landing, and follows the course of the great wagon train migration across the mountains and plains to the Coast—the historic journey which furnished the author with his theme. Then from Hollywood, Cal., another line moves across in opposite direction, showing where the Cruze company went, in Utah and Nevada, to make the big scenes for the picture. The huge preparations for the picture, the assembling of the vast equipment and the marshalling of the hordes of extras and technicians, the actual roping and breaking of the hundreds of steers used to draw the covered wagons in the picture, are all emphasized pictorially.

Then follows glimpses of the big scenes, such as the departure from Westport Landing, the attack by the Indians on Fort Bridger, the buffalo hunt and the exciting fording of the swollen river, together with the big intimate scenes more directly connected with the unfolding of the dramatic plot. Short subtitles give supplementary information concerning the cast and story as well as everything of advertising and exploitation value directly connected with it.

"See for yourself," is the implied slogan of the featurettes, and it is the opinion of S. R. Kent and other Paramount sales executives that they are going to revolutionize the business of film selling as applied to special productions.

Paramount's Advertising Veritable Dynamo

FROM the time when Paramount inaugurated its present national advertising policy, some eight years ago, Paramount advertising admittedly has been the backbone of the motion picture business. In fact, on more than one occasion it has proved to be the dynamo that has kept the machinery of the industry running.

At the outset of its national advertising campaign which has done so much to sell motion pictures to the public, the company spent in the first year a sum of money which was regarded skeptically in some quarters as extravagant. Time has proved the falseness of that view, Paramount has kept on expanding the scope of its national campaign, and in 1923 the company will spend about ten times as much in selling Paramount pictures for the exhibitor to the public as it did that first year.

Cecil B. De Mille, Director-General of Famous Players-Lasky.

A. M. Botsford, advertising manager, with the cooperation of Hanff-Metzger, Inc., advertising agents, has completed his plans for the national advertising of The Super Thirty-Nine—a campaign greater in magnitude than any ever before launched. As usual, The Saturday Evening Post, with its circulation of more than two million copies every week, will carry the message in greatest volume.

The Post campaign for The Super Thirty-Nine will start in the issue of January 13. This will be a full page in colors, the Paramount trade-mark dominating the illustration and the text being captioned. "The name that earned fame through thousands of hours of wonderful entertainment!" In a box at the right is text calling attention to the complete announcement of The Super Thirty-Nine to be found in the Post of January 27.

In the issue of the 27th, immediately preceding the initial release of the six months product the listing of all the pictures will be carried in a double-page spread in colors. Double-page spreads in black and white will be run on each of the following six special productions set for day and date release, the advertisement in each instance appearing in the Post dated the day before the release of the picture: "Adam's Rib," "Java Head," "Bella Donna," "The Glimpses of the Moon," "Hollywood" and "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife."

Copy on "You Can't Fool Your Wife" and "The Rustle of Silk," also day and date releases, will consist of single pages in colors, while the big James Cruze production, "The Covered Wagon," will be handled in a unique manner. Several weeks before the release of that picture a series of quarter-page teaser advertisements will be started, and they will culminate in a double-page spread in colors. Incidentally, color pages on "The Covered Wagon" will be run in many other national magazines.

Supplementing this production advertising in The Post there will be a page in colors every four weeks.

In addition to the campaign in The Post, all the leading fan magazines will carry at least one full page in each issue, with two-page spreads on some of the bigger pictures. The Ladies' Home Journal will also carry a page each month, while Pictorial Review will have a special advertisement on "The Glimpses of the Moon," the story of which ran serially in that magazine.

E. E. Shauer, Assistant Treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky.

"Covered Wagon" Pictorial Epic of West:

FOR the amount of expenditure involved in a successful endeavor to make one of the great classics of the screen, for the number of people employed steadily from the start to the finish of the picture, for the difficulties encountered and overcome and for the mighty theme of the story, this James Cruze production exceeds anything ever before attempted by the Paramount producing organization.

The picturization of Emerson Hough's wonderful story of the conquest of the great West was made in Nevada and Utah. Hundreds of people were transported to the huge Baker ranch in Nevada, consisting of 200,000 acres. The whole West was combed for every available prairie schooner still in existence and nearly two hundred of them were procured. Their transportation, along with that of the rest of the vast amount of equipment, required thirty special trains. A thousand Indians were rounded up for the staging of the most realistic Indian battle scenes ever filmed, and special permission was given for the staging of a real buffalo hunt, in which the great herd on Antelope Island, in Great Salt Lake—the largest herd in existence—was used.

No printed page is sufficient to present an adequate description of the magnitude of this picture, with the vast Western plains as the background for its thousands of people, 600 oxen, 1,000 horses and 500 buffaloes—produced without stint by the man who made "The Old Homestead." It is a picture of great historic importance, presenting a cast including Lois Wilson, J. Warren Kerrigan, Alan Hale, Charles Ogle, Ethel Wales, Ernest Torrence, Tully Marshall, Guy Oliver and John Fox. The scenario was written by Jack Cunningham.

Scene from "The Covered Wagon," the most elaborate production ever undertaken by Paramount. Based upon the novel of the same name by Emerson Hough, it is being directed by James Cruze. The cast includes Lois Wilson, J. Warren Kerrigan, Alan Hale, Charles Ogle, Tully Marshall, Guy Oliver and others

"Hollywood" Is Hailed as 1923 Sensation

HERE is a picture! As something unique in the realm of the cinema this one has never been equalled. When Frank Condon submitted to Jesse L. Lasky the script of his novelette, "Hollywood, and the Only Child," Mr. Lasky was amazed by its novelty, charmed by its story and enthused in the contemplation of its wonderful possibilities.

Ask any motion picture fan which she would rather see, Hollywood or New York, and the answer will be, "Hollywood, if I can see everything and everybody when I get there." And "Hollywood," directed by James Cruze, shows "everything and everybody."

But make no mistake. "Hollywood" carries with it no propaganda, no exposé of the secrets of picture-making. It is not a moving picture tour of Hollywood. It is a real, fast-moving story, a human love romance of a girl who wanted to get into the movies—and doesn't succeed. The heroine is the counterpart of a million American girls, with a consuming ambition to act in moving pictures. Like so many others she thinks her beauty will prove to be the open sesame, but oddly enough, even her old-fashioned father, her maiden aunts, her sweetheart and finally her own twin children "beat her to it." And running through the plot are melodrama, love, mystery and humor, all in abundance.

And the cast—just about everybody big that you can think of. Cecil B. DeMille has a prominent part—the first instance on record of a big director playing a role in the production of another director. Along with him is featured an array of stars that will make every other so-called all-star cast fade out of memory. The list includes Pola Negri, Gloria Swanson, Thomas Meighan, Wallace Reid, Bebe Daniels, Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt, Betty Compson, May McAvoy, Leatrice Joy, Lila Lee, Theodore Roberts, Conrad Nagel, Lois Wilson, Theodore Kosloff, George Fawcett, Charles Ogle, Walter Hiers, Jacqueline Logan and others, some of whose names, when announced, will take your breath away.

Without question, "Hollywood" will be the box-office sensation of 1923.

Thomas Meighan to Do "White Heat"

EVERYBODY who reads the Saturday Evening Post is familiar with the stories of the steel mills by R. G. Kirk. The author wrote "White Heat," especially for Thomas Meighan. It is the story of a young steel engineer who runs a small steel plant. There are scenes actually taken in the Pennsylvania steel mills. Percy Heath is the scenarist and Alfred E. Green the director.

Title with Punch for Melford Picture

"YOU Can't Fool Your Wife" is a George Melford production, which is enough in itself to ensure its box-office success. And what a punch that title carries! What possibilities for exploitation and advertising! Waldemar Young wrote the story, basing it upon an original by Hector Turnbull. The theme is one that always attracts, albeit the eternal triangle is given a new twist. Leatrice Joy, Nita Naldi and Lewis Stone are the featured players.

"Adam's Rib" Unique DeMille Production:

A scene from Cecil B. DeMille's "Adam's Rib"

THOSE who argue that there is nothing new in the photoplay are due for a surprise when they see Cecil B. DeMille's production, "Adam's Rib," which is another original story by Mr. DeMille's talented and justly famous scenario writer, Jeanie Macpherson. Here, indeed, is another demonstration of the DeMille flair for the "different" that pulls the crowds.

This startling romance is played out, for the most part, against a strange setting of skeletons of animals that lived somewhere around fourteen million years ago—probably the most unique setting yet used in a motion picture. These reconstructed prehistoric monsters are exact copies of those treasured in the American Museum of Natural History and the Smithsonian Institution. In connection with these curiosities Mr. DeMille has gone back farther than ever before in the making of scenes which represent how people lived, or might have lived, in the days before history dawned.

"Adam's Rib" carries over the interest started in the modern girl by "Manslaughter" by giving the other side of the case—in other words, setting her forth in her best light. Thus, Mr. DeMille is answering one tremendously successful and sensational picture with another, just as he answered, "Don't Change Your Husband" with "Why Change Your Wife?" Milton Sills, Elliott Dexter, Theodore Kosloff, Anna Q. Nilsson and Pauline Garon are the principals in a wonderful cast.

Pola Negri's First American Production : :

POLA NEGRI, George Fitzmaurice, "Bella Donna"—here, indeed, is a combination which is wonderful to think about. Could a more perfect role have been chosen for the first appearance of the great Polish star of "Passion" and "Gypsy Blood" in an American-made picture! And could there have been a more ideal selection of a director for the Robert Hichens story than George Fitzmaurice!

The author of "The Garden of Allah" wrote this great novel of Egypt in 1909. Dramatized by Bernard Fagan, it was produced by Charles Frohman in 1912-1913 with Alla Nazimova in the title role and created a tremendous sensation. It is the story of a fascinating adventuress who marries an Englishman and goes with him to Egypt. There she comes under the influence of an Arab chief and plots the death of her husband by slow poisoning. The plot is frustrated and the woman is cast upon the hands of her Egyptian wooer who in turn spurns her and leaves her to walk across the desert to oblivion.

A great cast is seen in support of the star. Conway Tearle plays Baroudi, the Arab, and Conrad Nagel the husband. Claude King is cast as the physician-friend who discovers and exposes the plot, and Macey Harlam has a heavy role such as he glories in. Ouida Bergere wrote the scenario and Mr. Fitzmaurice has achieved his greatest triumph in the staging and directing of this lavish production.

Pola Negri is the star of "Bella Donna"

"Knighthood" Introduces "Super 39" List :

Marion Davies in "When Knighthood Was in Flower"

TO this superb production from the studios of the Cosmopolitan Corporation is accorded the honor of first place on Paramount's February schedule, introducing "The Super Thirty-Nine" to the public. On this picture Cosmopolitan spent more than a million and a quarter dollars—and it looks it.

The tremendous success scored by George Fitzmaurice's "To Have and To Hold" and other recent productions of similar type has proved once and for all that the public is educated to the costume picture and will flock to it if it is something more than a spectacle, as most costume pictures of the past have been. Here, unquestionably, is the greatest of them all. The most competent critics have said so, and the business that the picture has been doing at the Criterion Theatre in New York and in several other leading cities where it has been playing long runs proves the correctness of their judgment.

It's a great story, this romantic novel by Charles Major of the period of King Henry VIII, and Miss Davies, under the able direction of Robert G. Vignola, rises to dramatic heights she has never before attained. The sets, designed by Joseph Urban, are gigantic, substantially realistic and of unparalleled beauty. The picture was six months in the making and presents 3,000 actors, genuine antique armor and rare tapestries, costumes, furniture and paintings.

In the supporting cast are Forrest Stanley, Lyn Harding, Pedro de Cordoba, Ruth Shepley, Ernest Glendinning, Charles Gerrard, Macey Harlam and George Nash.

Thomas Meighan in a Rex Beach Story : :

HERE is a real special, if there ever was one—a special in every sense of the word, with one of the screen's most popular stars in the most popular story ever written by one of the world's greatest writers of fiction.

Alfred E. Green, who has made all of Meighan's recent Paramount pictures, including "The Bachelor Daddy," "Our Leading Citizen," and "Back Home and Broke," is the director, while Tom J. Geraghty, Paramount's supervisor of production at the Long Island studio and one of the most gifted scenario writers in the business, adapted the story for the screen.

For the benefit of those who perhaps have not been fortunate enough to have read this Rex Beach masterpiece, it may be said that "The Ne'er-Do-Well" is a story of regeneration, a theme which invariably means success at the box-office. A young fellow who is more or less notorious for the scrapes he has got himself into and who has come to be regarded by his father as a ne'er-do-well, is drugged by a bunch of rollicking friends and wakes up to find himself on board a ship bound for Panama, without a cent. To make matters worse, he is suspected of a crime which he did not commit, so when he arrives in Central America he is refused aid from his father. There he falls under the influence of an adventurous woman and everything seems to conspire against his reform.

Director Green is taking the entire company, which includes Lila Lee, John Miltern and Laurance Wheat, to Panama, there to film all the scenes right where the author laid them.

Excellent Cast Assembled for "Java Head"

A GREAT story by a great writer of fiction, produced by a great director and featuring a great cast —that's "Java Head." Adapted by Waldemar Young from the story by Joseph Hergesheimer, author of "Tol'able David," this is one of Paramount's biggest pictures of the season.

The story is laid back in 1850, with the quaint old city of Salem, Mass., as the chief locale. The action, however, carries half way 'round the world, for it was in China, whence he had gone on a sailing ship, that Gerrit Ammidon, Salem shipmaster, met and married his pretty Chinese wife who was destined to lead such a stormy existence back in the old New England town.

A scene from "Java Head"

To make this picture Mr. Melford brought his entire producing unit from the West Coast to the Long Island studio, and in order to get true atmosphere he took his company up to Salem where all the exterior scenes were made, chiefly in the shipping district which was once one of the greatest centers of commerce in America. Back at the studio some wonderful sets had been erected and there the picture was brought to completion.

The cast chosen for this production is one of the greatest ever assembled under the Paramount banner. Here are some of the members: Leatrice Loy, Jacqueline Logan, Raymond Hatton, George Fawcett, Albert Roscoe, Arthur Hull and Rose Tapley.

"Grumpy" Ideal Role for Theodore Roberts

WILLIAM DE MILLE has become famous during the past few years for his masterly translation of stage plays to the screen. Witness: "Miss Lulu Bett," "Bought and Paid For," "Nice People" and "Clarence," among others. Now he has essayed "Grumpy," the wonderful play by Horace Hodges and T. W. Percyval, which provided one of the greatest character studies in the history of the modern stage.

Clara Beranger, who has written the scenarios of nearly all the recent William de Mille pictures, wrote the adaptation of this play. The story is more than thrilling, involving an attempted diamond robbery, and through it all runs a wholly satisfying thread of romance.

"Grumpy" was first presented at the Theatre Royal in Glasgow in September, 1919. Later that same season it opened at Wallack's in New York, where it ran for 180 performances. All the next season it ran in London and in 1915-1916 it was brought back to New York for a return engagement. Throughout the two runs in New York and the one in London, the quaint title character around which the play is built was played by Cyril Maude.

"Grumpy" is made to order for Theodore Roberts, even more so than was the role of Uncle Josh in "The Old Homestead." Featured with him will be May McAvoy, with Conrad Nagel playing opposite.

Jack Holt in "Nobody's Money"

Gloria Swanson in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife"

Gloria Swanson in "My American Wife"

THIS Sam Wood production is made from a scenario by Monte M. Katterjohn, based upon Charlton Andrews' adaptation of the famous French comedy by Alfred Savoir. A year ago the play was presented at the Ritz theatre, New York, with Ina Claire as the star, and scored a tremendous success.

This "Bluebeard" is a modern American millionaire who has gone to Biarritz to wed a famous French singer. He has been married before no fewer than seven times, his first wife having died and he having divorced all of the other six. But he meets another young French girl, becomes infatuated with her beauty and decides to marry her rather than the girl to whom he is engaged. His attentions are not welcomed by the young woman, but her father and sister, learning of his immense wealth and the fact that he always settles 200,000 francs a year on his wives, make arrangements for the marriage, which eventually is consummated.

As in the case of the former wives, the millionaire tires of this one and seeks to divorce her, but she, even though she is not in love with him, decides obstinately to hold him—and does, by the most amazing stratagems imaginable.

The story calls for the ultimate in daring gowns and withal makes an ideal vehicle for Miss Swanson.

"Glimpses of the Moon" Gorgeous Production

PARAMOUNT was extremely fortunate in securing for picturization Edith Wharton's great novel, "The Glimpses of the Moon," for with the publication of the first installment of the story in Pictorial Review last May its wonderful photoplay possibilities were apparent. Running serially through the August number, the story was published by D. Appleton & Co. simultaneously with the last installment and has topped the best sellers of fiction every month since.

The plot is quite unique. The heroine, luxury-loving and dependent entirely upon her rich friends, and the hero, a poor but socially ambitious writer, marry with the understanding that should an opportunity present itself to either one to better himself financially and socially, the other will not stand in the way. Here, sure enough is a theme with great possibilities.

The company has gone the limit on this production. Allan Dwan, who now perches on the top of the directorial ladder by reason of his production of "Robin Hood," starring Douglas Fairbanks, was engaged to direct, and Bebe Daniels was chosen to play the leading role. Opposite her is David Powell, while the only Nita Naldi is seen in a vampire role. Rubye De Remer and Maurice Costello are also in the cast. The picture breathes luxury and wealth, with thousand-dollar gowns by the score set off in lavish backgrounds.

Walter Hiers Is Introduced as Paramount Star

WITH "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," Paramount introduces a new star in the person of Walter Hiers, his entrance into the select circle being in deference to numerous requests from exhibitors as well as in recognition of his pronounced talent as a comedian.

Dana Burnet wrote this story of a necktie salesman who spent his last dime and then found himself embroiled in a life of adventure and romance. Albert Shelby Le Vino wrote the scenario and Wallace Worsley directed. Jacqueline Logan is featured opposite Mr. Hiers and Clarence Burton, George Field and Lucien Littlefield are in the cast.

"Children of Jazz" Title Tells the Story :

THIS is a story by Harold Brighouse, bearing a title that in itself is enough to bring people to the box-office in droves. Moreover, it is the first Paramount picture to be released as an Alfred E. Green production. Mr. Green has come rapidly to the front since he became a Paramount director. His first picture, "The Bachelor Daddy," starring Thomas Meighan, was classed among the best of the past year, and enjoys the unusual distinction of registering a full 100 per cent. in entertainment and box-office value in all the hundreds of reports from exhibitors, both the published ones and those received through confidential channels. Since then he has come through with three more big winners, all with Meighan as star—"Our Leading Citizen," "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow" and "Back Home and Broke."

Mary Miles Minter in "Drums of Fate"

In this comedy, the lives of the present younger generation and those of the preceding one are vividly contrasted when the children of jazz, some oddly mixed young couples typical of the jazz-mad age, are cast up on an island where a ceremonious old gentleman is living alone in the memories of the past. The natural consequence is that the jazz babies are brought to their senses. In other words, it is a story of regeneration, underlaid with a rich vein of comedy.

With all the elements that enter into the luxurious productions of Cecil B. DeMille, combined with a heart-interest story that is approached from an absolutely new angle, here is a picture to please all comers. And what a cast—Nita Naldi, Jacqueline Logan, Conrad Nagel and Robert Cain.

Compson and Tearle in "Rustle of Silk" :

THIS is a George Fitzmaurice production, and tells just the kind of story that Mr. Fitzmaurice revels in producing on the screen. Cosmo Hamilton wrote it and Ouida Bergere adapted it.

It is an enthralling tale of a poor young English girl who falls in love with a famous statesman at first sight. His station in life being far above her own, she secures employment in his household as lady's maid to his wife, in order to be near him. Spurning the love of a worthy young man of her own circle, she resolves to win the object of her admiration. She dons one of the gowns of her mistress and goes to the Savoy, where she knows he is to dine, and there, through a ruse, secures an introduction to him. She continues her masquerading and at last succeeds in winning his attention and later his love. His wife discovers what is going on and the triangular situation develops most interestingly.

Mr. Fitzmaurice has directed both Miss Compson and Conway Tearle, the featured players, before with great success, the former in "To Have and To Hold" and "Kick In" and the latter in support of Pola Negri in "Bella Donna." This will be a de luxe special in every sense of the word.

Cosmopolitan Paramount Releases Strong :

COSMOPOLITAN productions will figure prominently in Paramount releases, some exceptionally strong pictures being contributed by that producing organization.

There are few pieces of modern literature more wonderfully suited to the screen than Marie Corelli's famous novel, "Vendetta." It is probably literally true that millions have read it, for it is probably the most successful of all the stories by the widely read author of "Thelma," "Wormwood," "The Young Diana" and "The Sorrows of Satan." It is the thrilling story of a man who, supposed dead, returns with a fabulous fortune and wreaks vengeance upon his enemies. Cosmopolitan has given it a magnificent setting, fully worthy of the great story, Frances Marion wrote the scenario and Alan Crosland directed. Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens are the featured players and the former, in the role of the modern Monte Christo, gives one of the screen's greatest portrayals.

What more need be said of "The Nth Commandment" from the Cosmospolitan studios than that it was made by the same trio that was responsible for "Humoresque"? Fannie Hurst wrote the story, Frances Marion wrote the scenario and Frank Borzage directed it. Like all the other stories by Miss Hurst, this one carries tremendous human appeal and consequent box-office value. Three wonderfully capable young players are featured—Colleen Moore, James Morrison and Eddie Phillips.

Cosmopolitan has also made a fine picture out of "Adam and Eva,"by Guy Bolton and George Middleton, which was a big success on the New York stage and found its picture rights in brisk demand. Luther Reed wrote the scenario and Robert G. Vignola, who produced, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," directed.

It is the story of a man who turned his family over to a young go-getter and came back to find them all changed. Its theme is universally popular, the laughs are many and the love interest is most appealing. Probably no other screen actress is so well adapted to the leading role as Miss Davies, and Cosmopolitan has surrounded her with a fine cast, including T. Roy Barnes and Tom Lewis.

Peter B. Kyne, author of "Cappy Ricks," "While Satan Sleeps" and "The Pride of Palomar," wrote "The Go-Getter," which will also be a Paramount release and it is one of his best. It possibly has been more widely read than any other story ever written by that popular American fictionist. Its theme is most inspiring, relating how a certain man surmounted many obstacles and finally got the thing he was sent for. The Cosmopolitan Corporation has given it a splendid production, entrusting the scenario to John Lynch and the direction to E. H. Griffith. A fine cast was chosen, headed by Seena Owen, T. Roy Barnes, Tom Lewis and William Norris, all of whom are featured.

Dorothy Dalton Continues With Paramount :

THREE pictures in which Dorothy Dalton will be seen for Paramount provide exceptional material for this star. It is said to be hard to determine in which she excels over the others. They are, "Fog Bound," "The Law of the Lawless" and "Dark Secret."

After an absence of many months, Miss Dalton returns to the Paramount schedule in "Dark Secrets," to renew her acquaintance with her legion of admirers whose numbers were so increased by her pictures of the past year, "The Siren Call," "The Woman Who Walked Alone" and "Moran of the Lady Letty." Edmund Goulding, talented not only as an actor and director but also as an author, wrote the story of "Dark Secrets" and Victor Fleming directed.

The action carries the spectator from a magnificent Long Island estate to London and then to Cairo. A thrilling feature of the picture is a battle between Miss Dalton and an untamable Arabian horse which throws her and makes her a hopeless cripple, it seems. Robert Ellis is leading man and Jose Ruben shines in the supporting cast.

The story of "Fog Bound" was published in the Argosy-All Story Magazine, Jack Bechdolt being the author. The scenario is by E. Lloyd Sheldon. The role which Miss Dalton plays is a most picturesque one, that of a girl who lives alone on an island out in the straits that lead to the Pacific, working a truck farm that her father has left her.

Known as an independent, pugnacious individual, she is left alone until one day when her peace is disturbed by the arrival of a criminal and his pursuers. There starts an interesting romance, rich in melodrama and heart interest. This is an Irvin Willat production.

"The Law of the Lawless" is a story by Konrad Bercovici, the Bohemian author whose writings are creating a furore in this country. It was first published in Pictorial Review. The setting of the story is unusual and picturesque, depicting the glamor and romance of gypsy life. The character played by Miss Dalton is that of a gypsy woman, as fearless as she is beautiful, who recognizes no law save that of her own desire. In short, it is an absorbing tale of primitive people and elemental emotions. In the chief roles supporting Miss Dalton are Theodore Kosloff and Charles de Roche, the famous French screen star who recently came to America to appear in Paramount pictures. E. Lloyd Sheldon wrote the scenario and Victor Fleming directed.

Betty Compson in "The White Flower"

Jack Holt's Progress Has Been Meteoric :

NO star in all the Paramount galaxy has come forward faster than Jack Holt, and "Nobody's Money" is a picture which is bound to make him more secure than ever in the hearts of fans. On the legitimate stage this play by William Le Baron had a long run last year in New York, and with its crook plot and underlying comedy it has lent itself admirably to picturization. "Nobody's Money" is a comedy-drama—the kind of picture that, after all, the majority of people prefer. Wallace Worsley was specially engaged to direct and a fine cast was assembled for the picture. Wanda Hawley, star in her own right, plays opposite Mr. Holt, with Robert Schable, Walter McGrail, Julia Faye, Charles French and Will R. Walling prominent in the support.

Dorothy Dalton in "Dark Secrets"

"Declassee" Is Chosen as Pola Negri Starring Vehicle

"DECLASSEE," acknowledged by all as the greatest stage play in which Ethel Barrymore ever appeared, its picturization by George Fitzmaurice with Pola Negri as the star is sure to prove a top-notch box-office attraction.

The play was written by Zoe Akins and was presented by Charles Frohman, Inc., at the Empire Theatre, New York, in October, 1919. There it played to standing room only for many months until it was necessary to give over the theatre to another production. Thereafter it played to records in Chicago and other large cities. The role is just the kind best suited to Miss Negri's wonderful dramatic talent. The scenario is by Ouida Bergere.

Remember what a corking good picture "Cappy Ricks" was? "The Light to Reward" is by the same author, Peter B. Kyne, who also wrote "The Pride of Palomar" and "While Satan Sleeps," and like "Cappy Ricks," it is a sea story. It is a story of shipwrecks and battles with the elements, in which Jack Holt, in the he-man role of the skipper of a lumber schooner, not only saves a steamer in distress in a Pacific storm but the life of his young wife as well. The scenario is by Jack Cunningham and Joseph Henabery is the director.

"The Tiger's Claw" is an original story by Jack Cunningham, one of the most talented of the Lasky studio staff of scenario writers. Joseph Henabery directed and the cast includes in addition to Jack Holt who is starred; Eva Novak, leading woman; Bertram Grassby, George Periolat, George Field, Aileen Pringle, Evelyn Selby and others. Holt plays the part of an engineer in the jungles of India who eventually is called upon to choose between the love of a true white girl and that of a faithless native with whom he allows himself to become infatuated.

The atmosphere of this picture is essentially Indian, with such interesting details as a tiger hunt, East Indian magic and native dances, all supervised by experts who have spent many years over there. This picture is said to be distinctly new and different in theme and atmosphere.

Agnes Ayres Picture Has Thrills Aplenty :

REMEMBER those wonderful automobile pictures — "Too Much Speed," "The Roaring Road," "Excuse My Dust," "What's Your Hurry?" "Across the Continent," etc.—that Wally Reid made from the stories of Byron Morgan? Will you ever forget them? Well, in "Racing Hearts" you have Agnes Ayres risking her precious life in just that kind of a picture by the same author. Like the others, it's a comedy-drama with thrill following thrill upon the automobile racetrack and boulevard. Some famous drivers take part in the race which Agnes wins in a most sensational finish. Yes, Theodore Roberts, with his familiar cigar, is here again as the father, with Richard Dix playing the leading man's part and Robert Cain doing a lot of dirty work. Paul Powell directed this one—one of those triple-guaranteed speed pictures that can't go wrong.

There is no present-day fiction writer who possesses more of the human touch than Clarence Budington Kelland, whose stories appear in Red Book. "Contraband," another production in which Miss Ayres appears for Paramount was published serially, starting in the issue of May, 1922, and is the story of a young girl, charming, attractive, but poor, who suddenly finds herself, through the death of an uncle, owner of a small-town newspaper. She moves in and runs it, and runs it right, without fear or favor, thereby provoking the anger of a wealthy old rascal who holds a mortgage on the paper and is determined by hook or crook to own and control it.

How Miss Ayres, as Carmel Lee, confounds him and sets him where he belongs, makes great screen entertainment. The scenario is by Beulah Marie Dix and Paul Powell is the director.

Agnes Ayres in "Racing Hearts"

Betty Compson in Hawaiian Story : : :

THE beautiful scenery and romantic atmosphere of Hawaii are transferred directly to the screen in "The White Flower," which will be Betty Compson's first picture in the Paramount Super Thirty-Nine. It is a Hawaiian story, replete with native romance revolving about a half-caste native girl.

Julia Crawford Ivers, known to the picture public only as a director up to five years ago, but who since then has been a leading member of the Paramount scenario staff, wrote the original story as well as the scenario, and then directed the picture. She went to Hawaii for material for her story and then took the entire company over there to make the picture. Edmund Lowe, Edward Martindel, Arline Pretty, Sylvia Ashton and Arthur Hoyt are among those who will be seen in the cast.

"Setting a thief to catch a thief," or the regeneration of a clever girl crook who helps a young lawyer to bring to justice some powerful millionaires who are defrauding the people of their rights, is the theme of "The Woman With Four Faces," by Bayard Veiller, author of "Within the Law" and "The Thirteenth Chair," in which Miss Compson will also be seen for Paramount.

With its absorbing plot, fine dramatic situations, well worked up and surprising climax, its love interest and with Betty Compson in the title role, it comes close to perfection as screen melodrama. Among other big dramatic scenes it offers the unusual spectacle of a convict escaping from prison by means of a rope lowered from an airplane.

Alice Brady Scheduled for Two Features :

"The Snow Bride," with Alice Brady as the star is a story of the Far North written by Sonya Levien and Julie Herne, two talented members of the Paramount scenario staff for Paramount release. Miss Levien wrote the screen adaptation. Miss Brady has a great emotional role, that of a fur trader's daughter who is forced by her father to marry against her will.

One of the greatest thrills ever seen in pictures, rivalling the cyclone in "The Old Homestead," is furnished by an avalanche which wipes out of existence every building in the little camp and every person except the girl and the man whom she really loves. Victor Fleming is the director.

Henry Kolker, producer of "Disraeli," in which George Arliss was the star, directed "The Leopardess," another Alice Brady starring vehicle which is an adaptation of Katherine Newlin Burt's novel. J. Clarkson Miller wrote the screen version. This is a story of the South Seas, in which is related how a strange power which is being exercised by a wealthy and unscrupulous adventurer over a white girl brought up among the natives is broken by a worthy young friend of her tormentor.

Edward Langford is Miss Brady's leading man, while the chief heavy role is played by Montagu Love. Other well-known people in the cast are Charles Kent, George Beranger and Marguerite Forrest. The picture was made for the most part in Florida, with some beautiful shots in which the palatial yacht of J. Ogden Armour, loaned by the owner, figures prominently.

Strong Productions for Gloria Swanson :

"MY AMERICAN WIFE" is another of the Sam Wood productions in which Gloria Swanson has scored so sensationally ever since she was elevated to stardom by Paramount and made her stellar debut in "The Great Moment." This picture is from an original story by Hector Turnbull, who wrote "The Cheat," and the adaptation was made by Monte M. Katterjohn. It is the romantic story of a love affair between a rich young American girl and a young Spaniard from the Argentine, who are brought together through the defeat of the latter's favorite race horse by one owned by the girl.

There are some gorgeous scenes laid in the Argentine capital and fans are promised some of the best racetrack and race stuff ever filmed. Antonio Moreno, former Vitagraph star, plays opposite Miss Swanson and Walter Long is also in the cast.

Miss Gloria in the role of the girl of today who has revolted against the time-honored social conventions and ideals of conduct governing the feminine sex—that's "Prodigal Daughters," a Sam Wood production. The theme of the novel by Joseph Hocking, which was adapted by Monte M. Katterjohn, is the revolt of modern woman.

A modern home is disrupted through the reckless whims of its members who include three women who have cast aside the rigid traditions of propriety. A flapper, a salamander and a socially ambitious mother are caught in a web of unrest and discontent of their own weaving. There is a terrific punch in this picture when Gloria is rescued by airplane from a runaway locomotive. Theodore Roberts and Ralph Graves are in the supporting cast.

Mary Miles Minter Cast in Two Stories : :

SINCE Mary Miles Minter put up her hair and became a young woman—in the pictures—her popularity has gone forward by leaps and bounds. "Drums of Fate" affords her still greater opportunities than ever before to demonstrate that she is possessed of rare dramatic ability as well as beauty. It is an adaptation of Stephen French Whitman's novel, "Sacrifice," published by D. Appleton & Co.

The story is described as thrilling in the extreme, the locale being Portuguese, East Africa. M. B. (Lefty) Flynn, former Fox star, who scored so heavily in support of Dorothy Dalton in "The Woman Who Walked Alone," is Miss Minter's leading man, while George Fawcett, Robert Cain, Casson Ferguson and Bertram Grassby help round out a supporting cast which is hard to beat. Charles Maigne directed.

Miss Minter is also the star of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," which is a screen version of the immortal story of the feud country by John Fox, Jr., read and loved by millions. The scenario is based upon the stage adaptation by Eugene Walters, who wrote "Paid in Full" and "The Easiest Way," and Charles Maigne is the director.

Miss Minter, being a Southern girl, is at home in the type of rugged role in which this picture presents her, and it will be recalled that her greatest success was in "A Cumberland Romance," a story similar in general type. A great supporting cast, headed by Antonio Moreno, former Vitagraph star, was chosen and the production promises to be one of the outstanding hits of the year.

St. Louis Briefs

Manager Edward D. Smith of the American theatre states that "Lightnin'" hung up a new record for dramatic productions in St. Louis, with the exception of 1904, the World's Fair year, during its three weeks' run here. He reported 58,893 paid to witness the twenty-nine performances of Frank Bacon's celebrated play in St. Louis.

Herschal Stuart, manager of the Missouri theatre, gave his screen to acquaint the people of St. Louis with the cruelly, uncharitable and un-Christian conditions that exist in many of the Poor Houses and Poor Farms throughout the state. The St. Louis Star, an afternoon newspaper, made a survey of the county farms and printed a series of articles exposing the lack of care given the inmates. In co-operation with Manager Stuart the newspaper took moving pictures of scenes on the farms. Nothing further was needed to convince St. Louis at least that conditions in the rural sections need immediate attention. Actual slavery exists in some sections, the paupers being auctioned off to the farmer who will pay the county the most for the use of the farm and occupants and he then proceeds to operate the place at a profit.

The Princess theatre, Macon, Mo., on January 1 will pass under control of the Illmo Amusement Company. The new owners will increase the seats from 500 to 700 and redecorate and repair the theatre throughout. Wallace Akin will be manager. He has been Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois salesman for Select Pictures. The Illmo Amusement Company also owns the Yale, Shelbyville, Ill.

The National Film Publicity Company during the past week moved to its new home, Duncan avenue and Sarah street. It has greatly increased facilities, having spent about $10,000 in adapting the building to its uses.

Charley Law of Pana, Ill., was seen along Picture Row.

F. M. Francis of the Lincoln, Charleston, Ill., and Paul Zurilla was among the exhibitors who called on Enterprise during the week.

Ed Fellis of Hillsboro, Ill., dropped into Paramount to arrange for forthcoming programmes.

George Newsum of the Plaza, Mount Vernon, and Tom Reed of Duquoin, Ill., were among the regulars who came to town during the past week.

Other out-of-town exhibitors here included: C. Henderson of Paducah, Ky.; R. E. Adkins of the Lyric, Elksville, Ill. and J. F. Whalen, Liberty theatre, Old Monroe, Mo.

In St. Louis' Exchanges

UNITED ARTISTS are receiving splendid representation in the St. Louis first run houses. "Tess of the Storm Country" has just concluded a successful week's run at the New Grand Central, Capitol and West End Lyric theatres, playing day and date, and in another two weeks will be started over the St. Louis Amusement Company's chain of fourteen neighborhood houses. George Arliss is playing a week's run at the Del Monte in "The Man Who Played God." The Pershing has been leased for Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood," commencing Christmas Eve, and Charley Ray, in "A Tailor Made Man," will open a week's run at the New Grand Central, West End Lyric and Capitol, beginning January 6.

Arliss is here in person this week, playing at the Shubert-Jefferson in "The Green Goddess."

John Ragland, secretary of Associated Exhibitors, who was here several days ago, stated he found conditions vastly improved in the southern section of the country, which he toured recently. He sees bright times ahead in 1923.

Holmer Gordon, publicity expert for Distinctive Productions, was assigned to St. Louis to put over George Arliss in "The Man Who Played God."

The Woman's Home Companion pictures for southern Illinois and eastern Missouri have been secured by Sam Werner's United Film Exchange. He also has "Wildness of Youth" for the same territory. Werner is said to have been given the rights to the Woman's Home Companion features on the recommendation of some very prominent film men down East. The producers wanted a high-class, alive, dependable distributor in these parts. Werner, who is the dean of the St. Louis film colony, fits the bill to a T.

Church workers and club women of Cairo, Ill., and Henderson, Ky., helped Harry Niemeyer of Goldwyn put over "Remembrance" in those towns.

The Gem booked the picture in Cairo and the Princess in Henderson. With the co-operation of the clergy and women Niemeyer conducted very successful "Remembrance Weeks," during which everyone was asked to remember some forgotten loved one or old dear friend.

The local Paramount sales organization attended the district convention held at Omaha, Nebr., last week. The trip both ways was made in a special car. Some class to McManus and his gang.

With Des Moines Branches

Harry Gottlieb, salesman for Universal, narrowly missed going over a 30-foot embankment and after having landed twice in the ditch he left his car at Cedar Falls and made it back to Des Moines on the train, accompanied by half a dozen other salesmen who had abandoned their cars. Tom Kitching says that he was greeted by Frieth with, "Tom! Ten minutes ago I nearly died!" after Frieth had narrowly missed going over a 20-foot embankment. The roads are all ice.

Harry Hearshey, contract man for Universal, passed the cigars last Wednesday when he became a blushing bridegroom. The bride was Miss Ethel Legg, prominent in Des Moines society.

Visitors at the Universal exchange last week were Buster Brown, of the Strand theatre at Iowa City, and Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks, of Mount Vernon.

S. L. Davic, head of the Universal exchange, and Hugh Bennett, short subjects man, made a flying visit to the key cities of Iowa last week and came back with the news that conditions are improving.

C. G. D. Adams, personal representative for A. A. Schmidt, general manager for Universal, is at the Des Moines exchange this week, transacting official business.

DONNA RISHER, formerly of the New York publicity staff for Robertson-Cole pictures, is in Des Moines visiting her mother. Miss Risher, who has brought a smart swagger stick back from New York, is now following Hall-Phillips sensations and such like for the New York Daily News.

Harry Nichols, manager of the Famous-Players exchange, returned this week from the convention of district and exchange managers in Los Angeles. He's chuck full of new ideas. During his absence all the swivel chairs and big desks have been revarnished and the office took on an especially spick and span appearance.

William Strickland and Nicholas Amos of the Pathe exchange spent Tuesday to Friday at Omaha for the Thanksgiving festivities.

Grace Veenstra, secretary for Mr. Nichols, manager for the Paramount pictures, spent Thanksgiving at Pella with mother. Mrs. Veenstra returned to Des Moines for a visit with her daughter.

Jack Curry of the F. P. accessories department reports that his mother is now "a new woman" after having undergone three critical operations. She has not been well for the past three years. Sometime this week she will be able to leave the hospital.

A. W. Nicolls, manager of the F. P. exchange, and salesmen, W. H. Wiley, Ted Mendenhall, T. M. Eckert and Frank Crawford and J. E. Kennebeck, exploitation, will attend the district convention in Omaha Friday and Saturday.

Des Moines Bulletins

Mrs. Lena S. Richardson, cashier for the Strand theatre, Des Moines, has been married to a Montana rancher whom she met this summer while vacationing at the home of her parents. They will make their home on his ranch, forty-five miles over the border from Yellowstone Park. The newlyweds attended the Strand theatre Sunday evening and for their benefit Mr. Helmts, manager of the theatre, ran a special slide stating "our cashier—just married" and the spotlight was turned on them while the orchestra jazzed the wedding tunes. Thursday evening they left for the west. Mrs. Richardson was exceptionally well liked and had won many friends of the theatre staff and theatre patrons.

Baker-Dodge, of Keokuk, have closed the Colonial theatre, which they recently purchased from Mrs. Francis Belle Watson. Baker-Dodge already own the Regent and the Grand in Keokuk and in buying up the Colonial they close out all competition. It is probable that they feel that the town isn't big enough for three theatres and that in closing the Colonial they will profit through the other two theatres. Mrs. Watson and her husband are undecided just where they will locate but it is their plan to continue in the show business and to run a motion picture theatre in some other town.

The manager of the Blairsburg, Iowa, theatre says that he is going to close up January 1. He may change his mind as business picks up.

Mrs. Morrissey, who was manager of the theatre at Garden Grove, Iowa, has bought the two theatres at Knoxville from Mr. Nelson. She took immediate possession.

Flo Ziegfeld was in town last week. He came to supervise the premiere of "Rose Briar," Billie Burke's new play. In one interview he declared that motion pictures have only hurt the balcony and gallery of the legitimate theatres and that he doesn't think much of the movies, anyhow! Selah!

Buffalo Film Row News

THE big news of the week in Buffalo was the organization of The Bond Photoplays corporation to handle the product of the Grand & North and the Nu-Art Pictures corporation. Under the new arrangement the Nu-Art exchange will move its product into the Grand & North building, in Franklin street, where all the business of the new organization will be transacted. The officers of the Bond Photoplays corporation are: Bob North, Sam Grand, Sam Zierler, John Weber and others. Sydney Samson and Fred M. Zimmerman will supervise the exchange end of the new business. Mr. Zimmerman is one of the best known exchange men in Western New York, and the amalgamation of the two exchanges came as a surprise to many, although negotiations had been in progress for several weeks, both in New York City and Buffalo. The matter was settled at conference in the Lafayette hotel here on Thursday, December 6, when Messrs. Grand, North, Zierler, Samson, Zimmerman and Weber met. The Bond corporation assumes the lease of Nu-Art's exchange in the big film building in North Pearl street, which extends until next May.

The F. B. O. exchange here won the cash drive for November as a result of which the Buffalo salesmen are in possession of some fat checks which when cashed will buy all the necessary things to make bright the Yuletide season at the homes of Harry T. Dixon and John M. Sitterly.

Martin Solomon, special representative for Warner Brothers, is working back toward New York City, stopping off at Rochester and Utica en route.

W. A. V. Mack, Pathe manager, gave a special screening party in Shea's Hippodrome Friday evening, Dec. 8, for local exhibitors, when he showed the new Pearl White serial, "Plunder." Ray Powers, office manager for Paramount, went to Syracuse last week to help put over "When Knighthood Was in Flower," at the Robbins-Eckel. On opening night he got in a jam in the lobby and had all the buttons torn off his coat. Branch Manager Allan S. Moritz has closed "Knighthood," for showing at the new Eastman theatre in Rochester. Mr. Moritz, Powers, Earl Brink, booker; and the entire sales staff took the choo choo for New York Monday to attend a sales conference at the home office of District I, division I, in the Hotel McAlpin. The local bunch went over the quota assigned for Buxbaum week and another big banquet looms as a reward.

Around Seattle's Branch Offices

GEORGE P. Endert, manager of the local Paramount-Famous Players exchange, and his staff of salesmen were expected back in Seattle during the early part of December, after having attended the convention of district managers and salesmen of the Pacific Coast at San Francisco.

Al Rosenberg of the De Luxe Film Company, J. A. Gage, head of the local Educational Pictures exchange and other representatives of the Seattle film row recently attended the opening of Mack J. Davis' Mack theatre in Port Angeles. The house was erected at a cost of approximately $75,000. The opening bill included "Remembrance" as the feature, with some Educational comedy and travel reels as fillers.

Word recently received at the local Universal exchange announced the fact that "The Storm" had broken all house records at Jensen-VonHerberg's Liberty theatre in Wenatchee. The greatest crowds in the history of the show business attended the feature, according to manager W. L. Doudlah.

James Bills is the most recent addition to the De Luxe Film Company's staff, and is at present working out in the shipping room. He was formerly doorman at the local Strand theatre.

A. A. Haley has resigned his position as salesman for the Seattle Paramount exchange, and is preparing to handle two film subjects of his own in the four Western states, Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana, as well as in western Canada. The films "The Beginning of Human Life" and "Rejuvenation Through Gland Transplanting" are now being shown in California to large houses, and Mr. Haley expects to begin booking the pictures in his territory here in a very short time. He will open offices in this city for the time being.

"Nero" the Fox special, will have its first showings in the states of Washington, Oregon and Idaho at Mike Barovic's Stewart theatre in Puyallup, Wash., according to an announcement made at the Fox exchange. The picture will show at Dygert is president and general manager of the company, which now owns theatres in Canandaigua, East Rochester, Newark, Fairport and Salamanca.

Seattle Snapshots

John G. VonHerberg, head of the Jensen-VonHerberg circuit of theatres in the Pacific Northwest, has returned from a trip to Europe and the East and is again in his offices in this city, after an absence of almost four months.

While abroad, Mr. VonHerberg visited the European agencies of the Associated First National Pictures Corporation and leased 30,000 acres of land formerly owned by the Austrian royal family in the Tyrolean Alps. This land will probably be used by the First National Corporation for filming European productions.

"Continental Europe is no place for American pictures to-day," said Mr. VonHerberg. "Every country on the other side, with the exception of England, is broke. In England American pictures are going well."

After a few days in his office Mr. VonHerberg, accompanied by C. S. Jensen, left for Los Angeles, where it was rumored that he was to go into consultation with Adolph Zukor in regard to a subject which has not been made public.

All house records at the local Blue Mouse theatre have been smashed by the present engagement of "Tess of the Storm Country." A total of 8,500 persons saw the production at John Hamrick's house on the two opening days, Saturday and Sunday, and the picture continues to draw packed houses.

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" held the previous record for attendance, but "Tess" proved to be the biggest attraction played since the house was opened two years ago, in December, 1920, as far as attendance records go. The seating capacity of the Blue Mouse is slightly under 1,000. Admission prices for the "Tess" engagement are 50 cents, with loges at 75 cents, at all times. Children's admission is 20 cents.

Joy Brown, formerly of this city, has been engaged as organist at Fred Walton's Liberty theatre in Bellingham, and presides over the console of the Robert Morton organ formerly used in the Grand theatre of that city. Miss Brown alternates at the organ with Chester Walton.

Robert Kincaid, formerly with the local Paramount exchange, has re-joined the staff of the Strand theatre, which was increased at the beginning of the "When Knighthood Was in Flower" engagement. The picture finished a three weeks engagement to capacity business the middle of December. The last picture to play a three weeks engagement at Manager H. B. Wright's house was "The Sheik," in December, 1921, one year ago. Kincaid, before joining the Paramount staff, was doorman at the Strand.

Kansas City Jottings

A $15,000 damage suit has been filed against M. Van Praag, former president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas and owner of the Art theatre, Kansas City, Kan., by Edward J. Menninger. Menninger charges that, following a hold-up of the Art theatre recently, Mr. and Mrs. Van Praag caused his arrest and imprisonment for twenty-one hours. Two bandits, Lyle Hughes and Harry Davis, sentenced to the penitentiary in Kansas this week, included the Art theatre in their list of confessed hold-ups and Menninger alleges that he was arrested without cause.

Just as plans of the M. P. T. O. Kansas and Kansas City exchanges were about perfected for a meeting with Will Hays in Kansas City this week, word was received from Mr. Hays by the Presbyterian Laymen's Conference in Kansas City that he would be unable to be in Kansas City. Mr. Hays had assured officials of the laymen's conference that he would attend if possible, and a meeting with the Kansas exhibitors and exchanges was planned.

The following new houses and changes in management in the Kansas City territory have been announced the past week:

Yale theatre, Corder, Mo., opened by H. C. Linesbury; Lakin theatre, Great Bend, Kan., purchased by W. H. Weber; Photoplay theatre, Concordia, Mo., purchased by the American Legion, A. H. Schalzer, manager.

Norman E. Cameron, arrested in Kansas City this week on a charge of embezzling from ministers and school teachers in a proposed educational film production company, is a much wanted man. Information was received Thursday by the Kansas City police that Cameron was wanted in Los Angeles on the same charge. Cameron's scheme, it is alleged, by several ministers, was to depict great profits to be derived from a national producing company of educational and religious films that was to be organized.

A. K. Boussad, manager of the World-in-Motion theatre, Kansas City, was held up Tuesday night in his garage as he was putting away his car for the night. The bandit drew a revolver and took $60 in cash and a diamond ring valued at $200.

Carolina News

Harry Sommerville, formerly manager of the Pryor Leitch houses in Durham, N. C., has resigned. His successor has not been named, neither has Mr. Sommerville announced his future plans.

Charles G. Amos, of the Strand, Spartanburg, has been transferred to the Alhambra, Charlotte, N. C. Both are Lynch houses.

Colonel Henry B. Varner's new theatre in Lexington, N. C., is rapidly nearing completion. The colonel will be a regular "circuit magnate," with five theatres under his ownership and direct management, with the opening of the new Lexington house, which is going to be the last word in appointments.

Joe Goodenough's new theatre, the Branwood, in West Greenville, S. C., has a private parking space for over one hundred automobiles, enclosed and guarded. Claim checks are issued on all cars parked here while patrons attend the show.

Friends in the Carolinas will be glad to learn that Ernest Stellings, formerly with the Grand, Wilmington, has been appointed by Carl Kettler as booking and publicity manager for his Palm Beach and West Palm Beach, Florida, theatres.

Pennsylvania Paragraphs

Oscar B. Feldser, manager of the Broad Street motion picture theatre, Third street, near Broad, Harrisburg, Pa., was appointed on December 6 as tax collector for the Seventh Ward of Harrisburg. The appointment was made by the Dauphin County Commissioners, and the post is one of the most remunerative of a semi-political character in Dauphin county. He was formerly house manager for one of the Wilmer & Vincent picture houses in Harrisburg.

D. S. Cooper, proprietor of the Orpheum, the biggest purely motion picture house in Carlisle, Pa., has purchased the Carlisle office building, West High Street, near Hanover Street, where he plans to build a motion picture theatre with a seating capacity of 1,000, early in the spring. When the new house is completed the Orpheum will be abandoned for theatre purposes. The plot acquired by Mr. Cooper is 30 by 250 feet, and he is negotiating for an adjoining property which will also be part of the site for the new theatre if he succeeds in effecting the purchase.

The R. E. Shearer estate, Carlisle, Pa., has given an option on a group of four old buildings, on West High Street, directly opposite the Pennsylvania Railroad station, in the business center of Carlisle, to Mr. Nick, proprietor of a restaurant in that city. Mr. Nick proposes to erect a motion picture theatre on the site.

For the first time in the history of the Pennsylvania Legislature a motion picture exhibitor will be a member of the Assembly when that body convenes for its biennial session just after the start of the new year. He is Charles Howell, manager of the Colonial theatre, Lancaster, who was elected on the Lancaster Coalition ticket on November 7.

He had the unique distinction of winning out by 3,600 majority when all the other candidates on his ticket went down to defeat. He was candidate in one of the Lancaster city districts.

Mr. Howell is a man of impressive personality and he already is being looked upon by the men in the motion picture industry to take the lead in legislative matters affecting the welfare of the business. Each session of the Legislature in recent years has witnessed the introduction of a score or more of bills hostile to the industry, and with an aggressive leader on the floor of the House it is expected not only to curb legislation of a nature unfavorable to the motion picture industry but to foster measures helpful to those interests.

The Rajah theatre, Reading, recently leased by the Wilmer & Vincent interests, it is just announced, will be managed by Frank S. Mickley, formerly of Allentown. Mr. Mickley is a Lehigh University man and was a representative of the Hall-Thompson Company prior to his connection with the Bethlehem Globe.

A new march number has been composed by Robert C. Henke, organist of the Colonial theatre, Reading, entitled "March Emporium." It will be played for the first time by Mr. Henke at a performance at the Colonial.

Indianapolis Flashes

Police at Wabash, Ind., have closed up every line of business not necessary in the preservation of life as a result of the Sunday movie war, launched when P. H. and William Dickson, operators of the Eagles theatre, opened on the Sabbath a month ago.

The Dicksons were arrested on Sabbath desecration charges and were fined $5 and costs each. They protested it was not fair to prosecute them and let other lines of business go unmolested. So the police prohibited, on threat of arrest the sale of newspapers, cigars, gasoline (except to tourists), soft drinks, food (except at meal times) and other commodities. They enforced the decree with an augmented personnel the last two Sundays.

The fight has spread to Union City, where Roll Wenger was fined $1 and costs for showing on Sunday. He appealed.

The Garrick, North Star, Stratford and Garfield neighborhood houses are co-operating with the Indianapolis Board of Photoplay Indorsers in a Christmas program for the poor. Special matinees for children will be given, with admission a potato, apple, orange or other bit of food, to be turned over to an organization furnishing Christmas dinners for unfortunates.

In Kansas City's Exchanges

FRED W. YOUNG, former Robertson-Cole branch manager in Kansas City, has been named to succeed Roy Churchill as manager of the Kansas City F. B. O. office, following Mr. Churchill's resignation last week to accept a position as Goldman branch manager in Omaha, Neb. Mr. Young, who has been in Kansas City four years, formerly was an exhibitor in Iowa in 1908.

William S. Hart, the "good bad man" of the screen, spent all day Wednesday in the Westport section of Kansas City, searching about for historic houses and landmarks, which are many in Westport. Asked what his future plans were, Mr. Hart said that he did not know at present, that he was just "kicking up his heels" until he began making productions in the Lasky studios.

James B. Rielly, Kansas City manager of the Select office, filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the Federal court this week. Liabilities listed, with the exception of one entry, are notes owed banks and individuals in Ohio, amounting to $7,316.39. Listed assets include clothing and an equity of $500 in a 7-passenger motor car.

Three new salesmen have been added to the staff of the Kansas City United Artists office, John F. Paine, a former independent exchange man, Julian King, formerly with First National and F. B. O., and W. C. Ansell, formerly with Fox.

E. W. Hammons, president of the Educational Films, Inc., and L. W. Kniskern, Hodkinson division manager, were visiting in Kansas City last week, but the latter was in too much of a hurry to return to New York for a much anticipated turkey dinner to remain long.

With the Charlotte Branches

BILL HARWELL, exploitation manager for Southern Enterprises, Atlanta, and C. E. Peppiatt, manager of the Charlotte office, spent several days in Wilmington, N. C., the past week assisting D. M. Bain to put over "Manslaughter." They put over at least a dozen special stunts for the production, including a tie-up with the Wilmington Safety First Week, getting cooperation from the railroads, street car company, and fire departments in placarding the city with signs along the safety first idea, using the title of the picture.

J. Seichelman, of the home office contract department of Fox Film Corporation, has been giving sales talks to the Charlotte sales force.

Announcement from New York that the Charlotte Select office would close has been received with great regret by the many friends of Manager J. U. McCormick throughout the Carolinas. The road force has already been taken off this territory.

Herbert C. Wales, more recently with Charlotte Select office, but way back yonder with the General Film in its balmy days, has moved to Wilmington, North Carolina, where he has been offered the permanent secretaryship of the Southeastern Fair Association. It was Wales who put over the Southeastern Film Exposition in Charlotte in the winter of 1921.

W. J. Kupper, manager of the Charlotte Fox office, has been making a special sales trip through the Western part of North Carolina.

Cleveland Paragraphs

The Sunday situation is growing more and more perilous every day out here in Ohio. Last week seven motion picture exhibitors of East Cleveland and Lakewood, two residence suburbs of Cleveland, were arrested, charged with operating on Sunday, contrary to the law. This followed the arrest of Cleveland Heights merchants for the same offense. The hearing of the Cleveland Heights merchants was set for last Monday. Justice Hawkins, however, postponed the hearing until December 18, at which time he says he will hear the Heights, East Cleveland and Lakewood offenders all at the same time.

In the meantime the East Cleveland and Lakewood theatres are continuing to operate on Sunday.

From Bucyrus, Ohio, comes word of trouble. George Moore, of the Lyric Theatre, has been running up against the authorities for the past two years on the Sunday closing proposition. During these two years Moore has been periodically arrested, has periodically paid his fine—and has continued to show pictures on Sunday. Last Sunday, however, the police served notice on him for the twelfth time. Not only that, but they dismissed his audience and then put a padlock on the door of his theatre so that he couldn't open again.

The attitude of exhibitors from the small towns of the state is that they want the active support and help of the exhibitors from the big towns. Failing to get any assistance from them, the small town exhibitors say that if they cannot stay open on Sunday they will help to close all motion picture theatres in the state on Sunday.

Senator James Walker is scheduled to speak before the City Club of Cleveland on Saturday, December 16. His subject is "Censorship." Everybody in the film industry is waiting to hear whether the Senator will arrive in town in time to accept the entertainment that is being planned for him.

Governor-elect Donahey of Ohio, in a statement appearing in a recent issue of The Cleveland Press says that one of the first matters he is going to consider after he has taken office is that of censorship. Furthermore, Donahey said that he plans to divorce the Ohio Censor Board from the Department of Education, where it is now placed, and create a censor board independent of any other state department. The censor board of Governor Donahey's scheme, is to have three members. One of these is to be chosen by the motion picture producers. One is to be chosen by himself. And he has not said who shall choose the third.

---

The Ohio Censor Board has refused to pass Gloria Swanson's new picture, "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," claiming that it does not point a moral.

---

The movies were well advertised in town this week. Those who didn't attend a motion picture theatre and who attended the leading vaudeville houses heard all about pictures from Louise Lovely and Bessie Barriscale, both headline vaudeville attractions. Louise Lovely showed the audiences of the Hippodrome how pictures are made. Then pictures were made from the stage. Next week the pictures will be shown on the Hippodrome screen. Miss Barriscale appeared in a one-act dramatic skit.

---

"When Knighthood Was in Flower" is still holding the crowds at the Stillman theatre, Cleveland. It is being played a third week, and possibly a fourth.

---

Howard Lichtenstein has been made manager of the rechristened State theatre, of Dayton, Ohio. This was formerly the Auditorium and belongs to Elmer Rauh. Lichtenstein has been publicity manager for Fox for the past two years.

With the Cleveland Branches

C. E. PENROD, manager of the Cleveland F. B. O. office got back to the shores of Lake Erie last Monday after the F. B. O. convention in New York, so imbued with enthusiasm that he kept right on going, and passed his exuberance on to the exhibitors in the territory.

W. F. Lusk, office manager for First National, likes variety. That's one reason why he went over to call on the Toledo exhibitors this week.

Joe Tolland, publicity hound for the Cleveland First National exchange, explained his absence from the office for the past two weeks by announcing that he is now minus his tonsils. Tolland said he didn't enjoy the operation one bit.

W. J. Slimm, one of the best-known motion picture exhibitors in the state, has turned his back on the theatres, and is now devoting his time, his attention and his profits to an exchange. Slimm bought in on the Western Pictures Company, an independent exchange. He is president and treasurer. George Jacobs is general manager. To begin with the Western Pictures Company is releasing the Clark-Cornelius product, 5 Franklyn Farnums; 8 Jack Hoxie's; 12 Big Boy Williams; 3 Snowy Baker's; and 6 Richard Talmadge pictures. Slimm says it looks like a fat year.

W. O. Galloway has come all the way from Omaha, Nebraska, to become office manager for the Cleveland Hodkinson exchange, directly under C. L. Peavey. Galloway was formerly with the Omaha Educational exchange.

O. B. Solether, former Hodkinson office manager for Hodkinson, has joined the sales family of Associated Exhibitors.

J. E. Beck, local Vitagraph manager, just received word that "Masters of Men" with an all-star cast is the second of the 24 big Vitagraph Specials. Featured in "Masters of Men" are Earle Williams, Alice Calhoun, Cullen Landis, Wanda Hawley, Dick Sutherland, Charles Mason, Bert Apling and Jack Curtis.

M. A. Lebensburger, manager of the Standard Film Service Company, Cleveland, just returned from a tour of the "provinces" and says that while business, on the whole, is picking up; in Zanesville, it is booming. The reason is geographical. Zanesville is so situated that it is hard to reach. There are few trains in and out of the town. Therefore the people are dependent, for any amusement, upon local possibilities. The movies are benefiting by this condition.

Canadian Bulletins

A unique policy has been established for the Capitol theatre, Winnipeg, following the arrival there of Mr. H. M. Thomas, general supervisor of theatres for the Famous-Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, Toronto, to assume temporary management of the theatre. The new plan provides for a special musical program for practically every night in the week.

The schedule for a week now runs like this: Monday night, special overture by the theatre orchestra of twenty-two pieces under Director Earle C. Hill; Wednesday night, "Popular Song Night," for the introduction of new vocal and instrumental selections; Thursday, "Choral Night," when large choirs will be featured, the first to be engaged being the Welsh Male Voice Choir; Friday, "Band Concert Night," concerts to be played by the band of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry.

Two soloists have been permanently engaged for the theatre, Henry Thompson, tenor, formerly at Covent Garden, London, and Miss Leila Auger, an English soprano. Their programme at every de luxe performance consists of one solo each and a duet, to be presented with appropriate settings.

Mr. Thomas has taken charge of the Winnipeg Capitol in succession to Oral D. Cloakey, who has been transferred to the Capitol Theatre at Hamilton, Ontario.

The old Princess theatre, acquired by the City of Calgary, Alberta, for taxes, was reopened as the Variety theatre on December 4, with D. G. Walkley as lessee from the city, and with W. J. Reid as manager. The theatre had been closed for weeks, during which time it had been remodeled and redecorated. Evening prices for the engagement ranged from 25c to $1; matinees, 25c and 50c. The picture received much advance publicity in the Toronto newspapers and was well exploited before the opening.

A singular feature was the "American Night," which was staged at the Allen theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, on Friday evening, December 1, under the direction of Manager Miller Stewart and Conductor Charles Manning, when an orchestra of thirty musicians rendered a programme of patriotic airs of U. S. origin. A crowd that packed the large theatre gave vent to its enthusiasm in marked fashion. The opening number was "The Evolution of Dixie," a characteristic overture which depicted the eras of United States history; songs by a vocal octette and special soloists, including "Kentucky Babe," "Carry Me Back to Ol' Virginny," "Home, Sweet Home,"

Washington Items

Mark Gates, manager at Loew's Columbia, is a proud father. His wife presented him with a 7-pound son last week.

Harry M. Crandall announced in mid-week that he had purchased the Garden theatre on 9th, adjoining his present Joy theatre, known as Crandall's. This house, the first modern large motion picture in the city, played an important part in the fortunes of Tom Moore and was for years a money maker. Moore leased it from the owner, Col. Winter, and later closed the house at the expiry of his lease. Winter planned to use it in a contemplated neighborhood chain, which was to include a theatre at Columbia road. With Crandall taking over the property by outright purchase, there is no probability that the Winter chain will materialize. The house to be the eighth on the Crandall chain will be known as Crandall's Central.

Crandall's new $650,000 Tivoli theatre at Park Road and Fourteenth Street, N. W., will soon be under way. Freliminary work of razing the Sacred Heart church parish buildings has started, after which the excavation work will begin. Twelve shops, seats for 2,500 persons, direct focus from screen to booth, glass window in booth, so that patrons can see how a picture is screened, and other novelties are promised. Notable in interior and exterior decorative schemes is the Italian Renaissance motif.

To introduce the Washington first run of "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" Sidney Lust, manager and owner, invited local clergymen to be his guests at a preview Thursday night. The regular showing began Saturday. The ministers were well pleased with the picture, and appreciative of Mr. Lust's courtesy.

A large delegation of Baltimore exhibitors were here during the week, including J. L. Rome, John Back, Mrs. Byram of the Princess, and several others.

Emanuel Stutz expects to open the Chevy Chase theatre within the next two weeks.

Globe Amusement Company announces that W. E. L. Sanford, who has been with it since the Republic opened in May 1921, was appointed manager of the theatre the first of November. Sanford succeeds Pinchbeck, who is now at the Howard.

San Francisco Slants

A permanent organization has been formed by the Motion Picture Producers' Association. One of the interesting features of the first meeting was the decision to send the constitution and by-laws to Will Hays for his approval. It is explained that the local producers will co-operate with the national organization. The purposes of the organization are clearly set forth in a section of the constitution, which reads as follows:

"The purpose of this association shall be to purchase good fellowship and fraternalize among its membership and the common interest of those engaged in the motion picture industry in San Francisco by establishing and maintaining the highest possible morale and assisting the civic organizations in the proper exploitation of San Francisco and central California."

Syncopation has taken its place as a part of the musical program at Loew's Warfield theatre, with the introduction of the "Sherwoods' Tantalizin', Singin', Orchestra." This organization is well known in different sections of the country. The innovation of jazz de luxe will not interfere with the Warfield Music Masters, who will continue their dominion over the classical productions on the bill.

While the show was going on in the "T. & D." movie theatre in Oakland, across from San Francisco, three robbers flashing guns robbed the box office of $700 and escaped. The money was taken from Manager R. Kutzperger in the presence of the cashier, both of whom were covered with revolvers. While the robbery was being carried out the audience, in ignorance, watched the show. The number of the machine in which the robbers came was discovered by one who lived across the street, but it was found to be a stolen one.

New England Chatter

The Opera House of Gardiner, Maine, located on Water street, was damaged by fire last Thursday to the extent of more than $60,000. The principal losers were the Russell Amusement Company, who operate the house as a motion picture theatre, and the Claude S. Smith Company, dry goods, who had just got in their large stock of Christmas goods. The Russell Company owns the building.

Another, and more spectacular, fire occurred the next day in Shea's Theatre, Fitchburg, Mass, during the matinee. The fire started in the projecting booth, destroying about 1,000 feet of film, and badly burning Traynor Brown, the operator, about the face and hands. Brown is at the Burbank Hospital for treatment. Frank J. Healey, the owner-manager, averted a panic by addressing the audience from the stage, while two Fitchburg firemen, off duty and attending the show, tackled the blaze, and had it well under control before the apparatus arrived. The firemen were Anthony Lavoie, Hose 6; and John L. Healey, Hose 1.

After attending the matinee at the Rialto Theatre, New Bedford, Mass., one day last week, two boys in some manner not explained, got hold of reels of "The Bond Boy" and "A Matrimonial Boomerang," valued at $100, and ran off with them. Stanley Anton, the janitor of the house, saw the theft and chased the boys, but knowing the alleys and by-ways about the theatre better than he did, they managed to get away scot free. He reported the matter to the Weld Street police station, and detectives are trying to locate the missing reels.

A new picture house has been opened in New Bedford, adding one more to the several that already operate in that flourishing city. The latest is the Baylies Square Theatre, just opened, with Bessie Love in "Deserted at the Altar" as the feature of the initial program. The theatre, though primarily a neighborhood house, boasts a $10,000 organ, and report has it to be one of the finest in that part of New England. Paramount and First National pictures will be shown.

"The Third Alarm"

Emory Johnson-F. B. O.—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

THE past year the policemen got a big boost in "In the Name of the Law." In 1923 the fireman is coming into his own in "The Third Alarm," a picture which undoubtedly will go down in film history as containing the greatest fire fighting scenes ever staged for the camera.

The climax of this picture should pull every mother's son, yes, and daughter, too, right to the edge of their seats. It is quite the most exciting ending to a picture that we have seen in many, many moons. A real life size apartment is burned to the ground right before our eyes, at least that is the center of attraction, but at the same time we are given flashes of motor-driven apparatus dashing wildly through the streets, of firemen fighting against terrible odds, of a daring rescue as the walls of the building crumble, of the fall of the fireman and the girl into a pile of debris with a safe on top of it, of the jump of the old fire horse on which Dan is astride through a blazing archway to aid the fire laddies in their effort to pull the safe away, of Dan's final triumph and the little farm with all the old horses put in his care. It's all very vivid, colorful, true to life material and contains the stuff with which box office records are cracked.

Ralph Lewis, who also had the leading role in "In the Name of the Law," is seen in the leading part of this picture and, of course, he does his work well. Lewis is a finished artist. He doesn't act. He lives his part. Johnny Walker as Johnny McDowell, Ella Hall as the heroine, Virginia True Boardman as Mother McDowell, Frankie Lee and Josephine Adair as the children, are all very acceptable in their respective parts, while "Bullet," the horse, and a wonderful dog actor, will provoke much comment.

This picture has wonderful exploitation possibilities and is bang up good entertainment.

The Cast

Dan McDowell.....Ralph Lewis
The Horse.....Bullet
Jimmie, a newsboy.....Frankie Lee
Dan's daughter.....Josephine Adair
Mrs. McDowell.....Virginia True Boardman
Johnny McDowell.....Johnny Walker

The Story—When motor apparatus is introduced in the fire department, Dan is retired on pension. Unable to find other employment he accepts a job as laborer. A cart comes along to which is hitched his old fire horse. Later his son is accused of stealing the horse and Dan is lodged in jail when he takes the blame. The son gets a job on the department. There is a big fire. There is a general alarm. The doctor's daughter is saved by Dan's son. Dan gives valuable aid "above the call of duty." In the end he is given charge of all the old fire horses and a little farm. His son wins the doctor's daughter.

Classification—A ripping good melodrama dedicated to the Firemen. Filled with dramatic situations.

Production Highlights—The best fire-fighting scenes ever placed in film form. The thrilling "runs" staged by the apparatus of every description. The tremendous climax, showing the burning to the ground of a large apartment house and some thrilling rescues and heroic work on the part of the fire fighters.

Exploitation Angles—Your big bet on this one is to tie up with your local fire department. Have them put on an exhibition run in the in-

Drawing Power—Should go big in all localities. Best suited for downtown houses.

"A California Romance"

Fox—4000 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

JOHN GILBERT, who was elevated to stardom a short time ago, is having a run of hard luck finding a story which gives him half a chance to appear human and display his talents. "A California Romance" is mediocre—not only in story value but in the technicalities of production, being poorly constructed and running around in circles in its concluding scenes. The director, it is true, is not entirely to blame, since the idea in the first place is unoriginal, and he has had no opportunity to dress it up with novel highlights. The sponsors, apparently, appreciated its shortcomings because an attempt is made to relieve its so-called serious moments with humorous subtitles which seldom hit the bulls-eye. The only compensation is the atmosphere which is furnished by an appropriate background.

The material is slight and offers very little action and suspense. And the burlesque captions only make it appear like an effort by those in charge to spice it up a little—with the result that it is neither good drama nor good burlesque. The plot treats of the time when California was annexed to the Union—when the land of warmth and sunshine was under the Mexican flag. The heroine is in love with a youthful Don who has a streak of cowardice in his make-up. She finally brings the affair to the point where she will give her love to a rival unless he shows some signs of being courageous. So he shows his fighting spirit and in the subsequent conflict the hated rival receives his punishment as the leader of a guerrilla band. You can spot the climax from the start.

The Cast

Don Patricio Fernando.....John Gilbert
Donna Dolores.....Estelle Taylor
Don Juan Diego.....George Seigmann
Don Manuel Casca.....Jack McDonald
Steve.....Charles Anderson

By Jules Furthman. Scenario by Charles Banks. Directed by Jerome Storm. Photographed by Joseph August. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Treats of the days when California was annexed to the Union. Hero, a young Mexican, refuses to fight. The heroine promises to wed his rival unless he shows his fighting qualities. The rival is discovered to be leader of a band of guerrillas and the hero emerges with flying colors.

Classification—Romantic drama of days when California was annexed to Union.

Production Highlights—The romantic flavor. The battle scene. The fine atmosphere and backgrounds.

Exploitation Angles—Would advise playing up the romantic quality of story, telling of days when California made history for United States—of the days when the state was annexed to Union. Would feature the star. Calls for romantic setting for prologue.

Drawing Power—Best suited for small neighborhood and second class downtown houses.

"One Wonderful Night"

Universal—4473 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE screen is taking the tip from the stage these days in presenting mystery melodrama which carry the action through a night of adventure and excitement. "One Wonderful Night," starring Herbert Rawlinson, is the latest sample of this intensified effort to intrigue the imagination and keep one guessing. Since the stage plays which carry out this idea are dependent largely upon noise and trick "business" it stands to reason that the screen is not so successful in carrying out the mystery. The trouble with "One Wonderful Night" is the emphasis of too much mystery action so that the spectator is continually "at sea" trying to make head or tail out of it. As in farces all it needs is for one of the characters to offer explanations and the story would be easy. But then there wouldn't be any suspense.

The picture moves fast enough—oh, there is something doing most every minute. Within a few hours the hero stumbles innocently upon a gang of crooks and becomes a benedict without batting an eyelid. One weakness all such pictures have, and it is shown when the action never slackens. There is no contrast—no effort made to balance it with a rest period. Everything is conducted at fever heat with the characters running around through various rooms, secret chambers and what not—to carry out the idea that fast and furious action must ever be dominant. Perhaps had the star appeared more at ease—had he shown more restraint and less nervous excitement the plot and characterization would have released more suspense. But he is too anxious to make it tricky and you accept it as so much mystery hokum.

"One Wonderful Night" will have its audiences. Those who want concentrated action will find it here. It will be accepted as a fair offering of its kind and good enough to be booked by any exhibitor who features a daily change of program. We will say that it carries too much plot so that one never becomes acquainted with the characters.

The Cast

John D. Curtis.....Herbert Rawlinson
Hermoine Fane.....Lillian Rich
The Maid.....Dale Fuller
Z. F. Fane.....Sidney De Grey
Chief of Detectives.....Joseph W. Girard
Jean De Curtois.....Jean De Briac
Anatole.....Amelio Mendez
Juggins.....Sidney Bracey
Minister.....Spottiswoode Aitken

By Louis Tracy. Scenario by George C. Hull. Directed by Stuart Paton. Photographed by G. W. Warren. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Young man picks up overcoat by mistake which belongs to a man he had seen assaulted. He discovers marriage license in pocket and learns that the victim is hired by her to become her husband so that she will inherit a fortune. Her father is eager to marry her off to a count who is really a fraud. The hero marries her and captures the crooks whose leader is the bogus count. The father admits his mistake and gives his blessing.

Classification—Mytery melodrama with emphasis placed upon rapid-fire action which transpires in a single night.

Production Highlights—The fast action. The mystery element.

Exploitation Angles—Would advise concentrating upon title, using plenty of leaders and teasers to put it over. Feature Rawlinson as starring these days in mystery melodrama. Use a lobby display of stills and cooperate with press with an advertising campaign.

Drawing Power—Will doubtless prove popular with houses which feature daily change of program.

"The Beautiful and Damned"

Warner Bros.—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS picture promised much more than what is revealed if one may judge from the novel. But presumably the vision of the censors in the offing compelled the sponsors to use the soft pedal. Scott Fitzgerald has been showing us the soul of the flapper as well as the spirit of the times in his stories. But the screen, following conventions, has not caught his psychology. One might say that only the skeleton of the novel is revealed here though the scenarist and director have incorporated the highly colored jazz life which is supposed to be carrying our younger set straight to perdition. We will say, however, that it is a spirited picture, which, while it offers no real substantial motive, entertains throughout its footage.

It makes capital of the high life among the hard drinking boys and girls who have too much wealth and idleness for their own good and the scenes which present this effort to appear regular are filled with pep and jazz and considerable humor. Particularly mirthful is the episode which features a gay party in the country home of the young newlyweds —when all the guests try to outdo each other in putting over their individual acts. Walter Long, as a bum picked up by one of the guests and taken along, nearly walks away with the honors. He is funny in his misfit evening clothes. A happy touch is when the gay Anthony takes up the watches and carries off the pendulum of the hall clock so that no one will be watching the time. The party ends in a near tragedy when the bum would force his attentions upon the bride—which causes her to become half delirious through fright. Yet the incident closes merrily as the tramp walks away with the watches.

The concluding reels become sentimental. And the action is quite different from the book. The bride would indulge in memories of her honeymoon and she is resolved to mend her ways, while the husband drinks harder than ever until he is knocked unconscious by a hold-up man. When his uncle disinherits him he resolves to go straight and fight for the old man's millions. His regeneration is in sight and the closing scene gives us a happy departure for Europe.

The Cast

Gloria.....Marie Prevost
Anthony.....Kenneth Harlan
Dick.....Harry Myers
Adam Patch.....Tully Marshall
Muriel.....Louise Fazenda
Dot.....Cleo Ridgeley
Mr. Gilbert.....Emmett King
Hull.....Walter Long
Bloeckman.....Clarence Burton
Maury.....Parker McConnell
Shuttlesworth.....Charles McHugh

By F. Scott Fitzgerald. Scenario by Olga Printzlau. Directed by Wm. A. Seiter. Produced by Warner Bros.

The Story—Rich youth marries a girl and they are content to live only for pleasure awaiting the death of the husband's wealthy uncle. The couple are happy for a time but they drown their troubles in drink. Finally the wife realizes their aimless existence and reforms, but the husband only drinks the harder, until he finally appreciates his worthlessness. After a long fight to win the uncle's millions they are successful and depart for Europe

Classification—Expose of colorful life among the disciples of jazz—a picturization of Fitzgerald's book of the modern youth craving excitement. Comedy-drama.

Production Highlights—The pep and spirit of the action. The party at the country home. The bit contributed by Walter Long. The appealing work of Marie Prevost. The sets and atmosphere.

Exploitation Angles—Would suggest capitalizing upon book, cooperating with book dealers for a sale on the novel. Picture suggests elaborate prologue which could feature dancing, etc. Would use stills and exploit a teaser campaign based upon plot.

"Environment"

Irving Cummings-Principal Pictures—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE regeneration of a crook has often been used as the theme of a screen story and it has never been known to fail in appealing to one's sympathy. Embroider such a theme in a plot of realistic action which reveals human touches, dramatic moments and plenty of conflict and you have a picture bound to offer rich moments of entertainment. Particularly is such a tale interesting when its central figure is a girl crook who has never known what it means to follow the virtuous path since she is a product of her environment—an environment of Chicago's underworld.

Harvey Gates, the author, has clearly defined his characterization and plot. He presents us with a heroine known as Chicago Sal who is thrown in sharp contact with the healthy air of the country. The girl has a sense of decency despite her life of crime. When she refuses to steal from a farmer, the argument is sufficient to arouse the honest toiler, and being a girl she is unable to escape with her accomplice. The story extracts sympathy from the start and holds the interest because the author has not effected the girl's redemption until she is made to understand that living honestly is the only way to find happiness. Of course the influence of love exerts its potent appeal. She is placed on probation at the farm house where she experiences the first contact with simple, honest people. But the evil associates arrive from Chicago and take her back. She cannot remain for she realizes that she is unworthy of the farmer's love. So she returns to the life of crime to the cabaret—to the underworld.

The picture unfolds several interesting scenes of Chicago's primrose path. Her regeneration seems hopeless until the farmer appears and offers his love and sacrifice. When he is sent to jail because of being seen in her company the girl understands the true meaning of devotion. And her redemption is in sight. The climax presents a fire scene with the hero rescuing his grandmother and the girl from the burning apartment, while the incident discloses several realistic moments in the underworld. There is no false note developed in the characterization. It is a vivid document picturized with a true insight into the ways of crookdom.

The Cast

Steve MacLaren.....Milton Sills
Sally Dolan, known as "Chicago Sal".....Alice Lake
"Willie Boy" Toval.....Ben Hewlett
Grandma MacLaren.....Gertrude Claire
"Jimmie," Steve's adopted boy.....Richard Headrick
"Diamond Jim" Favre.....Ralph Lewis

By Haryvey Gates. Directed by Irving Cummings. Produced by Irving Cummings. Released by Principal Pictures.

The Story—Girl from Chicago's underworld, steeped in crime, accompanies crook to farmhouse to rob it. Her good side manifests itself and she refuses to steal from the farmer. The quarrel arouses the farmer and she is caught while her pal escapes. The girl is placed on probation by judge—to remain on the farm for a year. She falls in love with the farmer but runs away to the city—still a product of her environment. After many trials she is regenerated and accepts the love of the farmer, knowing that she has proved herself worthy.

Classification—Crook melodrama based upon redemption. Romance and sentiment and pathos present.

Production Highlights—Scene when girl is caught by farmer. Scene in courtroom. The moment when she departs for the city. The cabaret scenes. The incident when farmer is caught aiding her to escape. The rescue scene. The good work by Milton Sills and Alice Lake.

Exploitation Angles—Title looks like the proper angle to exploit here, showing what environment will do in moulding life. Play it up as fascinating crook melodrama. Feature the all-star cast.

Drawing Power—Good audience picture for any house. Best suited for downtown trade.

"Peg O' My Heart"

Metro—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE combination of Laurette Taylor and "Peg O' My Heart" is as potent in its appeal as Warfield and "The Music Master." She has played the lovable, inimitable, irrepressible Peg for so long upon the stage that it stands forth a perfect cameo. Truly, one may be excused for using superlatives in lauding her screen expression of the character. Here is real pantomime—here is a study which will be accepted as one of the greatest of the celluloid drama.

Miss Taylor's voice is silenced which makes her acting all the more expressive. Every gesture, every whim, every impulse—these moods are colored by a real depth of understanding. There is no halting note discernible. Every move she makes—whether it is the lifting of an eyelid or a little finger—carries the utmost in perfect pantomime. It is as if she were alive. Her magnetism is ever dominant so that she actually seems to LIVE upon the screen. Here is no actress who plays an Irish character because it is given her to play. She is the Irish girl with all her caprice and charm, sentiment and pathos.

King Vidor, the director, deserves unbounded praise for following the play so faithfully. He has enough imagination and intelligence to know that he could not improve upon a work so endurable. So he has retained the flavor and spirit of Hartley Manners' play and humanized it with excellent results. Even the captions are excerpts from the original and these enhance its charm and background. We all know the story of the little Irish hoyden who positively refused to countenance suppression from her haughty relatives. We all know of her faith in herself, in her father and Michael, the dog. She goes to England and finds rich adventure and romance. And there is a wink in her eye even when the shadows are darkest. The Irish character is wonderfully revealed.

The story builds progressively, emphasizing the heart touch just as the play emphasized it. The characters are clearly defined and the incident is thoroughly in its place and brought forth just when it is needed to color a scene and lend atmosphere. It's a picture which tugs at the heart and is destined to hit the high mark of screen production. Surely it will be appreciated everywhere. The supporting cast is excellent. The ending is the only departure from the original but it does not mar a single scene which has preceded it. The plot and characters are perfectly dovetailed. And the result is one of the hits of the year—one of the hits of the past ten years. The screen needs more of Laurette Taylor. We hope for the sake of real art that she comes back to it.

The Cast

Margaret O'Connell (Peg).....Laurette Taylor
Sir Gerald Adair (Jerry).....Mahlon Hamilton
Jim O'Connell.....Russell Simpson
Ethel Chichester.....Ethel Grey Terry
Christian Brent.....Nigel Barrie
Hawks.....Lionel Belmore
Mrs. Chichester.....Vera Lewis
Mrs. Jim O'Connell.....Beth Ivins
Alaric Chichester.....D. R. O. Hatswell
Margaret O'Connell (Peg as a child)..Aileen O'Malley
Butler.....Fred Huntley

By J. Hartley Manners. Scenario by Mary O'Hara. Directed by King Vidor. Photographed by George Barnes. Produced by Metro.

Classification—Adaptation of Hartley Manners' celebrated play with Laurette Taylor in her original role of Peg. Romantic comedy-drama.

Production Highlights—The marvelous performance contributed by Laurette Taylor, making her screen debut. The fine comedy flavor. The compelling romance. The conflict between Peg and her haughty relatives. The excellent direction as shown in progressive action, work of players, backgrounds and atmosphere.

Exploitation Angles—Would play this up big as one of the hits of the season, emphasizing fact that it is adapted from celebrated play with star in original role. Would advise dusting off the S. R. O. sign. Play it up as King Vidor's best effort. Put over Irish color and background for prologue.

"Heroes of the Street"

Warner Brothers—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

BOYS, hop on this one quick! It will be doubly valuable to you if you book it for presentation during the holiday season, because it is loaded with Christmas stuff and will be an ideal attraction for this season of the year. It's a great picture for the children. It's clean, full of fun, has a goodly quota of thrills and is unusually well produced. It is a much better production in every way than "Rags to Riches," and in addition to all the above mentioned qualities, it can boast of a splendid cast, including Marie Prevost, Jack Mulhall, Philo McCullough, Wilfred Lucas, some talented child players and Will Walling, who is ideally cast as Mike Callahan, one of the finest of New York's "finest."

The picture is dedicated to the "heroes of the street," the policemen, and tells a story that is really entertaining. Most of the first part of the feature deals with the home life of the "cop," and shows us that these guardians of the law are real human beings after all. There is a lot of wholesome comedy introduced by Mickey and the gang and the scenes in the theatre gallery, especially the falling popcorn episode are bound to evoke much merriment. The dance tableau in which Marie Prevost is introduced as a "queen of the Follies," is a lavishly staged bit. Instantly Marie here has an opportunity to display that for which she is famous. Yes, you are right!

The scenes in Callahan's home as he and mother prepare for Christmas day will surely touch the most hard boiled. It's a view inside the home of many of the "finest," right at this moment. It's real. Pop goes out on his beat, gets into a mixup with a couple of crooks, is killed by "The Shadow," a mysterious personage and a shadow is cast in the Callahan home, which young Mickey bravely fights to turn into sunshine by playing Santa Claus himself after which he assumes the role of sleuth and sets out to aid in running down those who killed his father.

The Cast

Mickey Callahan.....Wesley Barry
Betty Benton.....Marie Prevost
Howard Lane.....Jack Mulhall
Gordon Trent.....Philo McCullough
Mike Callahan.....Will Walling
Mrs. Callahan.....Aggie Herring
Symes.....Wilfred Lucas
Arthur Graham.....Wedgewood Lowell
The "Kid".....Phil Ford
Peaches Callahan.....Peaches" Jackson
Joe Callahan.....Master Joe Butterworth
Baby Callahan.....Bumps Beaudine
The Dog.....Cameo"

By Edmund Goulding and Mildred Considine. Directed by William Beaudine. Photographed by E. B. DuPar and Floyd Jackman.

The Story—Mike Callahan, one of the "finest" is killed while answering the call to duty on Christmas Eve. He is murdered by a mysterious personage called The Shadow. Mickey, his son, assumes the role of a youthful Sherlock Holmes and after a series of adventures, some amusing, some thrilling, captures the guilty personage and wins a reward of substantial figures.

Classification—The life of the policeman done into a melodramatic and at times romantic pictureplay.

Production Highlights—This is the most timely picture on the market for presentation during the Christmas holidays. It is loaded with Yuletide atmosphere. The abundance of comedy introduced in the early part of the picture. The tableaux in the theatre set. The antics of the kids in the gallery. The shooting of Mike following his struggle with a pair of crooks. The scenes in which "Wes" plays Santa for his little brothers and sister.

Exploitation Angles—Have your local chief's endorsement printed in the paper. Give a private showing for the "heroes of the street." Play up Wesley Barry and the fine cast. Have a kid dress up as Santa Claus and put on the street with approviate signs.

Drawing Power—Good for most every locality.

"As a Man Lives"

Achievement-American Releasing—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

CHARACTER development is the theme back of this story but it loses its logic and a great deal of its force in its telling due to a picturey treatment of lurid melodrama. The action covers considerable ground and strains credulity most of the time since there is much counterplotting in addition to the main argument. We are presented with a scapegrace son who is the despair of his wealthy parents. When he encounters romance in a Greenwich Village bookshop, even the new thrill is not enough to make him mend his ways. You see the girl doesn't trust him. So he goes to Europe where he becomes a denizen of the underworld.

The story gets off on another tack at this point—which has to do with plastic surgery. An Apache, jealous of the American's interference with his sweetheart's defense, kills her and begs a surgeon to make over his features so that he might avoid arrest. The good surgeon incidentally is the discarded lover of the American's mother. The counterplotting continues and treats of an evil associate of the boy's father who for some mysterious reason schemes with the Apache to embarrass the youth. A telegram finally reaches the surgeon from the youth's mother asking him to find the boy and bring him back to America as his father is dead. So Paris is left abruptly and the story becomes more complicated when the heroine's father dies from a sudden heart attack through receiving information that the deceased has mulcted him of considerable money by investments in a "salted" mine.

The action jumps to the West with all the principal characters making their entrances and exists per schedule—with each one's appearance well timed. The concluding reel is developed to inspire a thrill when the evil associates and his Apache friend conspire to blow up the mine and get the gold which they know is there all the time. The surgeon is watching to see the results of his plastic art and to see if the hero is developing any character. Finally an innocent boy blows up the mine which calls for a regeneration on the part of the villain. He will rescue the girl who is hanging perilously to the rope far below the surface. And to save her he sacrifices himself. The picture is puzzling and hard to follow. Some of the characters could be eliminated, which would make the action more compact. Frank Losee and Gladys Hulette contribute the best performances in roles which are not clearly defined.

The Cast

Sherry Mason.....Robert Frazer
Naida Meredith.....Gladys Hulette
Dr. Ralph Neyas.....Frank Losee
La Chante.....J. Thornton Baston
Henri Camion.....Alfred E. Wright
Mrs. John Mason.....Kate Blancke
Babette.....Tiny Belmont

By Bob Dexter. Scenario by Wm. Dudley Pelley. Directed by J. Searle Dawley. Photographed by Bert Dawley. Produced by Achievement Films. Released by American Releasing.

The Story—Wastrel son of rich man meets girl, but her influence is not great enough to inspire him. He goes to Europe and experiences several escapades—one of which involves him in a murder although he is innocent of the crime. He arouses enmity of Apache. A surgeon famous for plastic surgery makes over the features of the crook and takes kindly interest in youth. Eventually he returns to America and makes a man of himself and wins the girl after a harrowing adventure.

Classification—Melodrama based upon character development and considerable plot.

Production Highlights—Sincere work of Gladys Hulette and Frank Losee. The atmosphere of the Parisian cabaret. The rescue at the mine.

Exploitation Angles—Would play this up as a lively melodrama. The title might come in for some special advertising along the lines of a

Drawing Power—Might prove suitable for second class downtown houses.

"The Hottentot"

First National-Thomas H. Ince—5953 Feet

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

WHILE it is dangerous business to forecast what a comedy will do on the basis of a pre-view, it seems safe to say that "The Hottentot" is one of the sure-fire audience pictures of the season. It is farce, with occasional touches of melodrama and here and there a bit of slapstick, but from an audience standpoint it looks like mighty good entertainment.

"The Hottentot," on the whole, follows the stage play from which it is adapted very closely, with the added gain that the steeplechase is actually seen and does not merely take place off-stage. One fundamental change which has been made, however, concerns the hero's fear of horses. In the stage version, he had been an experienced horseman, but had suffered an accident which gave him a distaste for horses. Consequently, when he entered and won the steeplechase it seemed perfectly logical. In the picture, MacLean, apparently, is entirely unused to horses, and has always disliked them. The change is probably more than justified by the added comedy which results, since logic is not especially important in farce of this sort.

MacLean gives a comedy portrayal of the type which is distinctly his own. He is in his natural element in this sort of role and production and his work is entirely satisfactory.

Madge Bellamy has comparatively slight opportunity in the picture for her wistful appeal, but she is optically satisfying and provides adequate support for MacLean. After her performance in "Lorna Doone," however, it would seem a shame if she were to be wasted on farce comedy in the future.

Raymond Hatton adds another to his list of diverting characterizations. The remainder of the cast give capable, though more or less conventional, portrayals.

The important thing, however, is that this production, whatever its technical shortcomings, is packed with hearty laughs and pleasing entertainment.

The Cast

Sam Harrington.....Douglas MacLean
Peggy Fairfax.....Madge Bellamy
Mrs. Carol Chadwick.....Lila Leslie
Ollie Gilford.....Martin Best
Mrs. May Gilford.....Stanhope Wheatcroft
Swift.....Raymond Hatton
Major Reggie Townsend.....Dwight Crittendon
Perkins.....Harry Booker
Mickesson.....Bert Kindley

From the play by Victor Mapes. Directed by James W. Horne and Del Andrews. Produced by Thomas H. Ince.

The Story—Young man desperately afraid of horses is mistaken for famous jockey of same name. As girl with whom he is in love is a great admirer of horses, he hesitates to explain. He is inveigled into riding the Hottentot, a high spirited horse, which runs away and throws him. The steeplechase comes off the next day and the girl asks him to ride Bountiful, her horse. He agrees. The butler, thinking to aid him, hides Bountiful. The horse is found, but has become ill. The girl is so disappointed that he impulsively buys the Hottentot, gives the horse to the girl, then enters it in the race. His jealous rival wagers him that he will not be able to mount the horse, clear the first jump, or stay on through the steeplechase. In spite of a bad fall, however, he wins the steeplechase, and with it, the girl.

Classification—Entertaining farce comedy, with melodramatic moments and excellent heart interest. Adaptation of stage play of same name featuring Willie Collier.

Production Highlights—Hero's rescue of heroine in runaway. His wild ride on the Hottentot. Comedy boxing scene between Hatton and MacLean. The steeplechase.

Exploitation Angles—Refer to the stage success. Appeal to horse lovers and tie up with any local organizations of them. Refer to other successes in which MacLean and Miss Bellamy have appeared.

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

"Fruits of Faith"
(Pathe—Two Reels)

If there is any fault to find with this two reel comedy drama starring Will Rogers it is that the picture is so strong that unless the feature to follow is "sure fire," the short subject is bound to be the best part of the program. It is a clever blend of comedy and drama, ably directed, artistically photographed, splendidly played and well assembled. And since it contains bits of every kind of screen lore, it has a marked general appeal. Three more reels of the same entertainment would not have been amiss.

"Larry," played by Will Rogers, an amiable and likable tramp, happens upon a wandering preacher who tells of the wonders of faith. Larry has no aversion to anything except work, so he tries applying that of which he has heard, and with gratifying results. His first few attempts put over a deal of clean, fine humor, but toward the last, the subject takes on a more serious guise. However, from an ordinary tramp Larry rises to the role of a useful citizen, the foster father of a child found in the desert. When the child cries for a mother, Larry cannot deny him, so he takes unto himself a wife (Irene Rich) and the two bring the child up as their own. When one day the real father appears, Larry's faith is put to the test, but he finds it adequate. The father is grateful for the care given his offspring and rather than interrupt such perfect happiness as he sees in the little family, journeys away, lawfully willing his property and the child to the man who befriended the youngster. There is something supremely genuine and appealing about this little comedy, with sufficient pathos to make it a "comedy-drama" and it is one of the best of its kind.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Fair Week"
(Pathe—One Reel)

AS the hired-man, who habitually holds fast to his money, but is induced to try his hand at "the shell game," while at the County Fair, Paul Parrott is at last, funny. There is nothing older than travesty upon the "taking in" of country folk when they stray away from the farm, but when such a situation is exaggerated, remaining clean and inoffensive, it is often funny. There are a number of laughs in this one reel, beginning with the first foot and running along in rapid succession. Since the action takes place at the County Fair, there are a number of clever make-ups, burlesqued types, and considerable rural atmosphere. It gets away from the repulsive low comedy and commands its laughs very legitimately—LILLIAN GALE.

"Via Radio"
(Educational—One Reel)

This subject, produced under the supervision of "The Scientific American," tells the story of radio, touching upon cause and effects and begins by showing "listeners in." It then takes up an explanation of "waves" and "vibrations" and delves deeply into the scientific development that has put this discovery into practical use. There is distinct value to the long reel, in that it is informative, entertaining and well compiled and could be shown to advantage in institutions of all kinds.—LILLIAN GALE.

Scene from the Mermaid comedy "A Good Scout," featuring Jimmie Adams

"Laughing Gas"
(Fox—Two Reels)

THE pathetic hero of this picture is the leader of the Purity League. He has a frightful toothache, and in order to make sure that he will be able to lead the League's parade he goes to a dentist to have the tooth pulled. The dentist gives him too much gas, and when the poor chap is released he reels and staggers as in pre-Volstead days. The fact is noted by various would-be inebriates, who follow him in the hope of "seeing where he gets it." Leading his little parade of earnest drinkers, he comes up with the Purity League parade just at the Mayor's reviewing stand. In the consequent general hysterics, everybody is arrested. An explanation from the dentist clears things up; but when that worthy returns to his office all the "drunks" are there waiting for a "large overdose of gas." The film carries a connected farce idea which is cleverly worked out. It ought to prove a real laugh-getter.—STUART GIBSON.

"A White Blacksmith"
(Pathe—One Reel)

GOOD, clan comedy with a smattering of plot, at least enough to connect incidents responsible for the fun.

There are two heir's to a property left by a deceased uncle, who decided to leave his paying business, a garage, to one (Paul Parrott) and a run-down, closed-down blacksmith shop to Paul's ungrateful and overbearing brother. Through error on part of their attorney, however, the inheritances are temporarily switched, making Paul heir to the blacksmith shop. His brother lords it over him and almost succeeds in annexing his girl, but in the end it is proved that Paul is rightful heir to the paying proposition. His endeavors to make the blacksmith shop pay (previous to the adjustment) supplies the comedy.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Fleeced for Gold"
(Pathe—One Reel)

LEARN a little every day," if seriously applied, would promote a demand for such entertaining, yet informative subjects as "Fleeced for Gold," a picturesque analysis of the sheep industry. It begins under the guise of romance, secures a good interest hold and then branches out into the tale of how sheep are raised and how so great an industry is carried on. Incidentally, since the picture embraces views of sheep grazing, and shows the beautiful western country where many live stock ranches are located, there is distinct scenic value.

"Here's Your Men"
(Pathe—Two Reels)

THERE is not quite so much story value to "Here's Your Men," one of the Ranger Rider Series starring Leo Maloney, as has been identified with those previously shown. Nevertheless, it is composed of the necessary ingredients of an interesting "western" hard riding, hard fighting and splendid scenic value.

The hero is ranger in love with the sister of a hot tempered young rancher. The latter disputes the justice of a neighbor's claim upon him, which leads up to a hand-to-hand fight between the older man and the brother. Later, when the brother is induced by his mother and sister to ride over and settle the claim to prevent further disturbance, it opens a way for two employees of the neighboring rancher to murder their employer, and lay the blame upon a man, whose well known temper will indicate his guilt. The hero ranger, however, happens to have seen enough to convince him that his prospective brother-in-law is innocent. He then rounds up the guilty two, arrives just in time to prevent further crime and clear the stain on his sweetheart's family name.—LILLIAN GALE.

Graphic No. 2550
(Educational—One Reel)

THIS reel is apt to be popular, since it leads off with Babe Ruth and shows how he is spending his time in preparation for another season of baseball.

Then Jean Richroche, chef of the Vanderbilt Hotel, New York, illustrates the proper way to carve fowl, using a roast turkey as object for the lesson.

Camilla Sabie, a school teacher of Newark, N. J., is also the champion woman hurdler of America who led the woman's meet at Faris, and won championship for hurdling and broad jumping.

That real characters are stranger than those outlined in fiction, is illustrated by pictorial description of "The chanting chimney sweep of New Orleans," an old colored man who seeks a job sweeping chimneys, by singing along his route. Incidentally, he always wears a high hat and frock coat.

The reel concludes with pictures showing the buoy patrol of Ambrose channel, and how the floating sentinels that lead the way into New York harbor are kept on the job.

"The Fortune Hunters"
(Pathe—Two Reels)

THOSE two remarkable characters in the Aesop's Fables Series, the cat and the mouse, are in prison when this one opens. They make their escape, meet with all sorts of entirely impossible adventures and finally reach the home of an uncle of the cat who is reported to have left them "his pile"—only to find that it is a pile of rocks just like that from which they have escaped. Meanwhile the pursuit is on and while they are fleeing a hugh bird seizes upon them. When he drops them they find themselves back again at the old original rock pile. A tidy little moral is pointed and at the same time any audience would find plenty to chuckle over in the quaintness of the situations and the characters.—STUART GIBSON.

THE latest Fox activity is the extension of Fox news service to Cuba. This step has been under consideration for some time and the plans have been laid carefully in order to insure a maximum of efficiency in the new venture.

The Cuban edition will be released in Havana next week and thereafter will be a regular weekly feature in the Cuban capital.

So far as the shipping of the reels is concerned, Cuba will have the same service as any city in the United States, and news events throughout the world will be shown on the screen at the earliest moment physically possible after their occurrence.

Also, it is planned to incorporate from time to time, news features especially designed to appeal to Cuban audiences.

Venice Described in Fox "Bits of Europe"

In the Fox Educational Entertainment, "Bits of Europe," released recently, the camera lens brings Venice into focus. Here motley gondolas are poled along winding canals. Being the only means of transportation in the city they are aptly termed "the floating taxicabs of Venice." This city has been a trade center since 1300. The lagoons of Venice have been the subject of many paintings. In the evening as the gondoliers—the American equivalent for chauffeurs—glide along the canals with their fares, they sing tunes that echo along the water. Swinging along the main route the observer sees on one side St. Mark's Cathedral that holds within its walls and even in its architecture, the finest examples of old world art. Rare paintings and rarer gems have been collected ever since the first ships brought their burdens from other ports. Near St. Mark's is the palace of the Doge of Venice, whose rule was iron law. High above the canal looms in shadow "The Bridge of Sighs," described in Lord Byron's "Childe Harold." The bridge joins palace and prison, where in deep dungeons were placed those found guilty of breaking the Doge's laws.

First "Better Films" Released in January

The first of the two-reel series of American home life, entitled "This Wife Business" and produced by Arthur J. Zellner for Aralma Film Co., Inc., has been set for release early in January so that it will be available to the theatres at the same time that the article by Alice Ames Winter, from which it is adapted, appears in Woman's Home Companion.

Mirror No. 4 Ready For Release

New International Novelty Reel Shows Real Pomp of Pre-War Europe

THE International News Reel Corporation announces the early release, through the Universal Exchanges, of a new issue of The Mirror, the novelty reel chronicling events of the past.

The new Mirror will be Mirror No. 4. It also is entitled "The Last Days of King Edward," and not only shows pictures of that British Monarch's last days, but shows the majestic ceremonies attending his funeral, and the accession of his son, the present King.

Mirror No. 1 showed the inauguration of President McKinley, in 1897. These pictures are said to be the oldest known moving pictures of a news event. They mark the screen's initial attempt as a recorder of history. Although not comparable with the clear photography of the present day, they are remarkable for their clearness.

Mirror No. 2, depicts "The San Francisco Fire," disaster, and Mirror No. 3, "The Birth of Aviation," illustrates the pioneer flights of such celebrated birdmen as the Wright brothers, Curtiss, Farman, and others.

Mirror No. 4 shows King Edward VIII in various poses, in and out of uniform, aboard a battleship, reviewing a regiment and in other ceremonies. With him are seen his family, including the present king, and the Prince of Wales, then a boy of 14.

The funeral of King Edward, who died May 6, 1910, is shown in all its pomp and ceremony. It shows nine of Europe's mightiest monarchs walking behind the casket. King George heads the royal mourners. Then comes the Duke of Connaught, followed by Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany, Princes Edward and Albert of Great Britain, the former now Prince of Wales, King Alfonso of Spain, King Manuel of Portugal; King George of Greece; Prince Constantine of Greece; the Czar of Bulgaria, and with them Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, who at that time was on his way back to the United States from his African expedition.

Bruce Back from Northwest

Producer of Wilderness Tales Returns to New York with a Group of Scenic Dramas

ROBERT C. BRUCE, who has spent the summer and fall in the Pacifis Northwest, making the second series of Wilderness Tales for Educational, has just returned to New York with a number of new subjects.

Bruce believes he has done the best work of his career this season, declaring that he has even surpassed his remarkable single-reel picture, "And Women Must Weep" in beauty and dramatic appeal.

"And Women Must Weep" was the first single-reel picture of a scenic character ever classified as an exceptional picture by the National Board of Review. Critics all over this country have been prone to call this subject one of the most beautiful pictures ever made by any American producer, while in England the Manchester Guardian declared "And Women Must Weep" and two other pictures of this series, the finest artistic gems which had ever come out of America.

"I believe," said Mr. Bruce, "that the critics will agree with me that some of my new pictures will surpass "And Women Must Weep." There is perhaps more of a story in each of my new subjects than there was in the pictures of the first group of Wilderness Tales. They are all laid out of doors and I have found and photographed in my recent travels in our own country, the most beautiful scenery I have ever found in the world."

One of the new Wilderness Tales is distinctly a sea picture. Another is a mountain subject. Still another is laid in a background of lake country.

Bruce made several excursions out of his headquarters in Portland, Oregon, in search of proper settings for his various subjects. His first trip carried him down the coasts of Oregon and California, all the way to the Mexican border and back to the neighborhood of San Francisco before he found the ideal location for the sea picture. He traveled well over 2,000 miles hunting for the proper background for this subject.

Century Officials Entertain Children

Julius and Abe Stern, executives of Century Comedies recently gladdened the hearts of over five hundred children of San Gabriel Mission. Through the efforts of Father Jose Precido, head of the Mission the Stern brothers sent Baby Peggy's newly completed Century comedy over to him.

The children were highly pleased with the picture which shows Peggy breaking into the movies and impersonating popular comedy stars including Charle Chaplin and Harold Lloyd. Father Precido became very much attached to the little star while her company shot exteriors in San Gabriel for her comedy of Spanish life.

"Citizens of the Sea" Shown in Pathe Review

Pathe Review enters upon its fourth year prepared shortly to release a series of novel and interesting subjects. Most generally diverting and informative of these probably is the series called "Citizens of the Sea," made with the co-operation of the New York Aquarium. The first of this series, called "The Grafters," is announced for Pathe Review No. 2, released on January 14.

In "The Grafters," the Review screen reveals under-water close-ups of the shark, suckers and pilot fish species which "graft" on the larger of the shark tribe.

Other subjects show the almost human expressions on the faces of the "Bluffers." For "Fish Faces" the cameraman succeeded in getting amusing close-ups of some exceedingly odd-looking specimens, including the moon fish, which is so thin that it is almost transparent.

Forthcoming issues of Pathe Review also will show a series called "Silliettes." The first example will be released in Pathe Review No. 3 on January 21.

In Pathe Review No. 2, released January 14, is a section called "Cavalry of the Air," revealing in a simple, understandable way exactly why an airplane flies and how it is flown. Other pictures in the series illustrate and explain the scientific methods that have been developed since the war for determining the capacity of a candidate for "taking the air."

"Fleeced for Gold" One-Reel Special

Combined romance and reality is a brief description of "Fleeced for Gold" which Pathe announces for release as a one-reel special on Dec. 17. This is one of the Oregon Trail Series Pathe announced not long ago, and is preceded by the two-reel picture, "The Price of Progress."

"Fleeced for Gold," as an important part of its action, presents in detail the highlights of the great Western sheep industry. A sheep ranch surrounded by rolling hills covered with thousands of the wool bearing animals furnishes an Eastern youth with the opportunity he needs to "accomplish something in the world," and thereby win the girl who will accept him on no other terms.

Timely Urban Popular Classics Announced

Vitagraph has arranged that the Urban Popular Classic entitled "George Washington" will be in the various exchanges so that the picture may have a timely release during the week of Washington's Birthday.

The release for this week is another of the "Roving Thomas" series, this one a trip on a fishing trawler. It is particularly interesting at this time as it shows the source of fish to be found in the markets at this season of the year.

Christie Company on Location in Honolulu

Al Christie and company of a dozen people have departed for Honolulu to make a new Christie Comedy featuring Henry Murdock.

In addition to Mr. Christie, who will direct the picture, and Henry Murdock were Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Hageman, Earl Rodney, Babe London, Miss Anne Christie, Dorothy Devore, Olive Leeds, Cameramen Phillips and Stout, Walter Graham and Robert Hall of the Christie scenario staff, who are going to get further ideas and a vacation, and two professional Hula-Hula dancers, who received their dancing education in San Francisco.

The new comedy is being called "A Hula Honeymoon," with Murdock, as announced recently, heading a Christie cast for the first time, with Babe London in support. Dorothy Devore is not in this picture, but is accompanying the party for the purpose of making another picture if locations are favorable. Al Christie has promised his mother to get himself and his sister back under the Christie roof in time for Christmas dinner, so it will be a speedy trip, with work going on practically all the time on the way over and back.

Pathe Will Issue 2nd Series of "Our Gang"

"Our Gang" Comedies were announced and issued by Pathe as a series of six pictures. But exhibitor reaction, according to reports, was so prompt that this Hal Roach production unit—including the studio "zoo"—prepared to continue indefinitely with the successful novelty at the rate of one comedy every four weeks. Accordingly Pathe now announces a second series of six "Our Gang" Comedies, to be released one every four weeks, beginning with "The Champeen," to be issued on January 28.

Each of the series thus far released is recognized as a box office winner. The Capitol theatre, New York, attests their popularity by selecting "Saturday Morning" as an important feature of its bill for Christmas week, and Pathe reports that exhibitors in most of the cities and towns of the United States will "go strong" on "Our Gang" throughout the holidays in recognition of the children's claim to have their preference considered.

Chattanooga Theatre Features Two Reeler

S. H. Borisky, proprietor of the Independent theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., featured the Educational-Christie comedy, "Oh, Promise Me," in a special program arranged for the American Legion post of that city.

"Oh, Promise Me" is a story written around an American Legion post. The principal male parts are taken by actors who are ex-service men, and the extras were chosen from lists including disabled veterans supplied by the Hollywood post of the Legion.

Holiday Subject Issued for Charity

Film Mutual Benefit Bureau Presents "Night Before Christmas," Hodkinson

Announcement has been made by the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau that the most widely known poem ever written, "The Night Before Christmas," has been picturized by the Bray Productions, Inc. Distribution is to be made through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, proceeds of which will be turned over to the fund used by the Committee for Devastated France and Maternity Center Association of New York. Miss Sophie K. Smith, Field Secretary for the Bureau,

This announcement is of unusual interest in view of the fact that the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau is intensely interested in insuring the success of this benefit. Among the members of the Bureau who are lending their support to this proposition are Governor-Elect Alfred E. Smith, Miss Anne Morgan, Mrs. Gordon Knox Bell, Miss Mabel Choate, Mr. Arthur C. Train, Mr. Frank Crowninshield, Mrs. Meredith Hare, Mr. George Gray Barnard, Hon. Everett Colby, Miss Rachel Crothers, Mr. Charles Dillingham, Mr. Henry F. DuPont, Mrs. LeRoy Edgar Newbold, Mr. Douglass Elliman, Dr. John A. Harris, Mr. Otto Kahn, Mr. Clarence Mackay, Mrs. Gouverneur Morris, Mr. Conde Nast, Mrs. Herbert C. Fell, Jr., Mr. Rodman Wanamaker, General John O'Ryan, Hon. George W. Wickersham, Mrs. Mortimer Schiff and others.

Dr. Clement C. Moore, who wrote the poem one hundred years ago this Christmas Eve, called it "A Visit from St. Nicholas," but all the world knows it as "The Night Before Christmas," the words forming a part of the first line. To avoid confusion, the picture has been given the better known title.

The picturization, in two reels, was made under the direction of Ashley Miller. It opens with a brief prologue reciting the genesis of the poem. The poem itself is picturized as having been dreamed by the six children of the author, Dr. Moore, on the night before Christmas, 1822; as it has been dreamed by countless millions of children since and as still other millions will dream it in years to come.

Authentic details of costumes and accessories in the picture were furnished by descendants of Dr. Moore living in New York. With the aid of old portraits John Woodford and Marie Olivette were able to appear as veracious reincarnations of Dr. and Mrs. Moore.

Mutt and Jeff Likened to Falstaffs by Prof.

One of the interesting things about Fox "Mutt and Jeff Cartoons" is that Bud Fisher's creations appeal just as strongly in Simsbury, Kansas, as they do in New York, N. Y.

"The appeal of 'Mutt and Jeff' is the universal appeal of genuine comedy. Long before motion pictures were invented Aristophanes was making the cultured Greek race laugh at his buffooneries," wrote Prof. Edman, celebrated psychologist, in a recent essay. "Falstaff is still a great creation and yet he is essentially a clown. Falstaff, like Jeff, symbolizes to a large extent the laughter of humanity at its own defeat. When Mutt—as he so often does—pounds Jeff, the audience's response is less than when Jeff turns the tables on Mutt. There humanity sympathizes with the under dog; it is Man laughing at Fate. And in its own peculiar way it is Art."

Lee Writing Fourth 'Script for Trimble

Robert N. Lee, Fox scenarist and author of "Shirley of the Circus," has begun writing the continuity for the fourth two-reeler to star little Arthur Trimble.

"The Adventures of Prince Courageous," as this series will be known, will be distributed by the Anchor Film Distributors, Inc., of Hollywood, Cal., and the first three productions are entitled "The Love Charm," "The Little Knight" and "The Crown of Courage."

Production-Distribution Activities

"Conquering the Woman" Booked by Loew's

"CONQUERING THE WOMAN," the Associated Exhibitors production which is Florence Vidor's latest starring feature, is now making the round of the Loew circuit of Greater New York, the Marcus Loew booking department having closed the contract with Lester W. Adler, of Associated's New York exchange.

"Conquering the Woman" is from the popular novel by Henry C. Rowland, and affords the charming young star an opportunity for a display of her talents in situations she has not depicted before. King W. Vidor directed the production, and in Miss Vidor's supporting cast are Peter Burke, Mathilde Brundage, David Butler, Roscoe Karns, Bert Sprotte, and Harry Todd.

"Notoriety" Is Sold for the South

The approach to a 100 per cent. sale of territorial rights on L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North's first Will Nigh production, "Notoriety" was hastened this week when the Peerless Film Company of Atlanta, Ga., bought the state-rights to the seven-reel society drama for the five states, including North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama. S. W. Grow & J. A. McWhorter, proprietors of the southern exchange, and Sam Sax, sales manager for L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North, were the agents in the deal.

The intensive and extensive selling drive outlined by Mr. Sax, sales manager for the producers, was taken up by the Southern distributors and is now on its way towards results.

Dorothy Gish Is Again with Barthelmess

Miss Dorothy Gish will support Richard Barthelmess in a picturization of Joseph Hergesheimer's story, "The Bright Shawl," which will be a First National release. This is Miss Gish's second appearance with Mr. Barthelmess, as they have just finished "Fury," an original story by Edmund Goulding, soon to be released by First National. Mr. Goulding has adapted "The Bright Shawl" to the screen.

"Nanook" in Museum's Archives

Pathe-Revillon Freres Donates Print to Education Dept. of N. Y. Museum

IN connection with its acceptance from Pathe and Revillon Freres of a print of "Nanook of the North" for its Department of Public Education, the New York Museum of Natural History gave a special showing of the Eskimo screen classic for school children on Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 13. As was anticipated by Curator George H. Sherwood, the announcement of the "Nanook" showing, together with the facts of the presentation, brought responses from the New York public schools that proved the capacity of the Museum's auditorium far from equal to the demand for seats.

The audience of children and teachers overflowed into the corridors and into adjoining rooms where the Museum's large collection of Eskimo utensils, weapons and curios received more attention than they had ever received before.

The Museum showing of "Nanook" was preceded by a short address by Curator Sherwood, in which he paid the institution's acknowledgments to the donors of the film and personally acknowledged its permanent value as an attractive and authentic ethnological contribution to the Department of Public Education. From the moment that the first scene was flashed on the screen the tense interest and delight of the audience showed no abatement. The incidents of Eskimo children at play, and the domestic scenes within the igloo—including the baby's morning toilet—were greeted with all sorts of delighted and laughing comments.

In response to Pathe's proffer of a print of "Nanook" to the Museum, George D. Pratt, one of the trustees, wrote: "This picture has been seen outside by some of the members of the Museum staff and they have all been exceedingly enthusiastic about it. They were delighted to hear that it is to be presented to the Museum."

New S-L Production Is Started

"Your Friend and Mine" By and With Willard Mack Is Being Made on Coast

FOLLOWING the reception accorded "Quincy Adams Sawyer," the Metro special produced by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin with a cast of unprecedented stellar names, Mr. Sawyer has commenced production of the next S-L Picture at the Metro West Coast Studios. This film is an elaboration of the well known vaudeville playlet, "Your Friend and Mine" written by Willard Mack, author of "Kick In" and other stage successes. It will be directed by Clarence Badger, under the personal supervision of Mr. Sawyer.

A cast even bigger in reputation than that gathered together for "Quincy Adams Sawyer" will portray the various leading roles in "Your Friend and Mine." Willard Mack, a stage star in his own right, will head a cast which includes Enid Bennett, J. Herbert Frank, Huntley Gordon, Otto Lederer, Rosemary Theby and others including Allene Ray, winner of the Motion Picture Magazine Beauty Contest of last year and a former star of Bert Lubin Productions.

Speaking of the production, Mr. Sawyer said: "I intend to surpass, if possible, the entertainment qualities of 'Quincy Adams Sawyer,' in making 'Your Friend and Mine.' A totally different type of story, it permits of wonderful characterizations on the part of Willard Mack, Enid Bennett, Allene Ray and others. The picture will be gorgeously embellished with sets of an exotic nature, some brand new lighting effects will be introduced by Mr. Berquist and as one of the novelties in the film, I have engaged the Ruth Denishawn troupe of classical dancers to appear in several scenes."

"Your Friend and Mine" will be released by Metro sometime during the month of February.

"A Woman's Faith" Is Ready for Screen

Arrow's first contribution to the current quota of mystery plays will be "A Woman's Faith," which is now ready for screen inspection, having been completely re-titled and re-edited by J. S. Harrington and Richard Weil.

Campaign for Capitol Opening of S-L Film

BERT ENNIS, of S-L and Bessie Mack, director of publicity for the Capitol Theatre, New York, are cooperating on an exploitation drive in the interest of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," the S-L special, which begins an engagement in the Capitol Theatre on Sunday, December 17th.

The usual advertising space taken in the New York newspapers by the Capitol management has been doubled. A contest has been arranged with the Illustrated Daily News, whereby a silhouette of six of the stars playing in "Quincy Adams Sawyer," will be published daily and prizes aggregating one hundred dollars offered to those readers guessing the identities of the players from the silhouette drawings. Special attention has been given to the lobby. A huge cut-out presenting the Photoplay Edition of the novel has been made from the leaves of which several of the characters in the film appear to be stepping forth.

"Environment" Is Sold for New England

Two important territorial sales on the second Principal Pictures Corporation special, "Environment," co-starring Alice Lake and Milton Sills, were announced this week by Eastern Manager Irving Lesser. The Irving Cummings production has been sold to William Shapiro of Franklin Film Company of Boston for New England and to Renown Pictures Corporation of New York City for New Jersey and New York State.

"Hamlet" to Be Presented by Children

The diminutive star, Buddy Martin, is being carefully rehearsed in the part of Hamlet and will soon introduce an innovation in filmdom by appearing in an elaborate production of the Shakesperean drama played entirely by children. The Nordisk Company is now carefully scanning the entire list of clever little girl screen stars to find one that can play the difficult role of Ophelia.

Motion Picture News

Selling Angles

The practical trouble with many an independent producer—and we counsel with many, here in this office—is that they make pictures for themselves rather than the market. ☞

There are, we will say, fine ideas back of them. They are strong dramatically; they portray sincerely; they have literary excellence; they may be artistic triumphs. ☞

If the producer is content to live for art alone, for the joy of expression—and can afford to—fine! The motion picture owes him a great debt of gratitude. But if he expects to make money—or even get his money back in any reasonable time—that is another matter. ☞

The picture is generally advertised to them in the trade press just as any other picture is advertised. They are not told how to put it over; they lack the facilities; or they don't know how. And, anyway, the daily change system only permits an advertising flash; and these pictures have nothing to flash—no big star, no big book or play; no big sensation. ☞

The name of a popular star or book or play is simply a ready made advertising value. That's why producers pay so heavily for these values. They bring the money back. They count tremendously in this business because flash distribution—the fast uncertain booking of pictures—demands flash advertising. ☞

The big producing companies today know what selling values mean to a picture. They plan pictures with that idea pretty nearly foremost.

And whether it's art or not, or right or not for the proper development of the picture—it is commercially successful. ☞

WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON.

Only A Shop Girl

Selling Angles

ONLY A SHOPGIRL was made not for ourselves but in response to a demand from exhibitors and the public for a picture that had real entertainment value and big box-office possibilities.

ONLY A SHOPGIRL is an artistic triumph—and, in addition, has a real public appeal, because it has brought money into the box-office of the legitimate theatres for 25 years, proving that it is what the public wants.

Art played an important part in ONLY A SHOPGIRL but we did not overlook the commercial angle, so that the finished product is a combination of Art, which the public demands, and money-making possibilities, which the box-office must have.

We have provided an extensive exploitation campaign which includes elaborate fashion display cards for local department store tie-ups, an extensive line of wonderful novelties and other advertising and publicity suggestions that insure the success of this attraction.

We not only took a play that had been a money-making stage-success for a quarter of a century, but we improved this selling angle by adding thereto an all-star cast including Estelle Taylor, Mae Busch, Wallace Beery, James Morrison, Tully Marshall, Willard Louis, Claire Dubrey, William Scott, and Josephine Adair.

We plead guilty to paying heavily for these values, because we know that the combination of a successful play and the all-star cast in ONLY A SHOPGIRL will positively bring money back to the exhibitor and give the public full value.

JOE BRANDT,

Trailer Completed for "Only a Shopgirl"

As another exploitation aid on the second of its Box Office Winners series, "Only A Shopgirl," the C.B.C. Film Sales Corporation announces this week the completion of a trailer which contains many pictorial selling arguments for the feature.

A trailer has been designed to show, in a condensed manner, the many angles of interest in this picturization of the Blaney stage success.

The trailer shows the great all-star cast in the feature, including Estelle Taylor, Mae Busch, Wallace Beery, Willard Louis, James Morrison, Tully Marshall, William Scott, and Josephine Adair; it picturizes also the variety of gorgeous gowns; it shows the lavish sets which the public demand; and the thrills have not been forgotten.

Service Book Ready on "Strangers' Banquet"

Goldwyn regards its big press and service book for the first picture Marshall Neilan has made in association with that corporation, "The Strangers' Banquet," as the best of the series of bigger and better service books which it has been issuing with its Big Twenty productions for the current season.

Every phase of exploitation and advertising service is covered adequately and some novel ideas embodied in this latest of Goldwyn's elaborate campaign books.

Apollo Plans Drive on Strauss' "Salome"

Bobby North, of Apollo Exchange, Inc., who has secured the exhibition rights on "Malcom Strauss' Salome" for the Greater New York and Northern New Jersey territory, announces that he is planning a "knock-out" advertising and billboard campaign in the metropolitan territory. Almost a hundred 24-sheet stands, located in prominent places all over the city, will be the opening wedge in this drive, to get under way within a few weeks, it is stated.

Critics Hail "Toll of the Sea"

N. Y. Reviewers Enthusiastic Over Rialto Showing of Color Photoplay

"THE TOLL OF THE SEA," the Technicolor production in a new natural color process which was first shown publicly at the Rialto Theatre, New York, has received the highest praise from newspaper critics, who acknowledge the photoplay as marking the highest development of color photography and who lavish equal commendation on its appeal as a dramatic and moving story.

"It is the perfect picture," said the reviewer of the New York Tribune, according approval to the splendid effects of the new color process as well as to the theme of the story. A few extracts from the criticisms of New York newspapers follow:

"The people who have made this new colored picture have done something so beautiful that it is rather awe inspiring and criticising it is like dissecting a butterfly. Never have we seen such perfect color as this. If this process is not perfect, then at least we could find no flaws in it . . . the perfect picture"—Harriette Underhill, N. Y. Tribune.

"Picture of rare beauty . . . greatest advance yet made in color photography . . . scenes of surpassing loveliness . . . Won a burst of applause from the audience"—Evening Mail.

"Really something quite marvelous. There never has been a full length picture in color which approaches it in effectiveness . . .

The combination of lovely, natural color and a touch of courage in faithfulness of play construction makes this a fine picture.—World.

"May be counted as a distinct achievement. Possesses the quality of genuineness and is convincingly acted."—The Times.

"Created a sensation . . . proved fascinating entertainment and won enthusiastic applause."—Telegram.

"Should revolutionize film dramas. It is an achievement in natural color films and without doubt, is an advance on all previous attempts at color photography."—American.

"Real humanizing of figures in photoplays finally has been mastered . . . It is with difficulty the spectator is made to realize that he is not looking at the actual persons and places, for every tint and tone in nature is reproduced exactly as the human eye views are originals of things."—Journal.

Coast Reviewers Laud "Shadows"

Al Lichtman Release Well Received at Los Angeles and Frisco Openings

"SHADOWS," which is on the Al Lichtman release schedule, has been favorably received at its openings in the Kinema, Los Angeles, and the Strand, San Francisco. Excerpts from dailies in both these Coast cities follow:

Grace Kingsley in the Los Angeles Times said: "Lon Chaney's amazing characterization of a Chinese good Samaritan, the puritanical scruples of the conscience-ridden preacher, played by Harrison Ford, the tremendously ironical death scene of Yen Sin when he turns to the white men's God only after making all who have been deriding Him confess their sins and at the last, the final glimpse of the old scow drifting off into the night as Sin's Soul passes—these are the things that impress one mightily in 'Shadows.'"

The Express said: "The tempo is skillfully retarded at times but has some highly exciting moments at the finale where the storm carries the expiring laundryman and his scow to the nothingness from whence they came. Lon Chaney is a past master of make-up. Supporting the star is Marguerite De La Motte who plays with rare discrimination. Harrison Ford is rapidly emerging into the atmosphere of dependable leading men."

"Its plot is novel" said Florence Lawrence in the Examiner, "and hinges on a most unusual angle and its whole theme is intriguing."

In connection wth the showing at Strand, San Francisco, the critics there said:

The Chronicle: "'Shadows' at the Strand Theatre this week comes pretty near being a great picture: great in a quiet, sincere way that sinks into the consciousness and leaves an impress there."

The Call-Post: "Lon Chaney contributes another of his great character portrayals to the screen in 'Shadows.' The theme is a tremendous and far-reaching one, that of forgiveness and it is expounded in this story in a most masterly manner in a series of splendidly enacted and artistically directed and photographed scenes which go to make the picture a truly worthwhile offering."

Billie Dove Popularity Contest Winner

Billie Dove received the greatest number of votes in a popularity contest held by George J. Wehner, a New York exhibitor who has under his control ten photoplay theatres. Miss Dove had been presented to the patrons of these theatres in her first Metro picture, "Youth to Youth," in which she was seen at the head of a distinguished cast.

"Bill of Divorcement" Is Timely Release

Uncommon interest has been aroused among exhibitors in "A Bill of Divorcement," in which Constance Binney is starred, on which release is set for Dec. 24 by Associated Exhibitors.

Letters to the sales department of Associated asking about booking arrangements, mention a combination of circumstances contributing to the great popular interest aroused by announcement of the forthcoming release.

The appearance of the universally popular Constance Binney in a straight, intensely dramatic role is everywhere regarded as a fact of assured entertainment and box office value. And only second in importance, in the opinion of exhibitors who have communicated with Associated, is the value of the title and the story themselves. Yet additional drawing power is seen in the timeliness of the release.

Miss Binney is supported by a strong cast, which includes the famous beauty, Fay Compton, popular as an actress on both the stage and the screen.

"Only a Shopgirl" Wins Praise from Author

Charles E. Blaney, author of the play "Only A Shopgirl" which has played to crowded houses all over the world for more than a quarter of a century, was this week given a special showing of the picturization of his play by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

He pronounced it as wonderful in every respect and said that the producers of the film had far excelled his expectations as to what could be done on the screen with this play—which was saying a great deal, as his expectations had been great because he had known from the beginning that the play contained a wealth of fine screen material.

Mr. Blaney congratulated Joe Brandt and Jack and Harry Cohn of C. B. C. as well as Director Edward J. Le Saint on the production, expressing the opinion that to the original and proved pulling power of the story of the play had been added a cast and settings that gave it a hundred-fold box office drawing power.

Visalia, Cal., Citizens in Viola Dana Cast

One hundred and fifty men of Visalia, Porterville, Hanford, Tulare and other towns in the San Joaquin Valley, California, who served in the world war played the role of State militia for scenes in Viola Dana's newest Metro picture, "A Noise in Newboro." Miss Dana and her company were in Visalia for ten days during which time an Armistic Day celebration was held. All of the 150 veterans took part in the parade and the same day appeared in Miss Dana's picture.

With the exception of the dozen screen artists brought from Hollywood by Harry Beaumont, who directed the production, the entire cast was made up almost solely of Visalians.

Re-Issue of "The Border Legion"

Following the success of T. Hayes Hunter's "Desert Gold," the recently reissued Zane Grey story, Hopp Hadley announces the reissue of another Zane Grey subject which is also a T. Hayes Hunter production, "The Border Legion," starring Hobart Bosworth and Blanche Bates. Hopp Hadley is also reissuing "The Wizard of Oz" for the second time and claims that it is in regular demand at fixed intervals by many theatres.

Lee Goldberg has secured "The Border Legion" for his territory, and Alexander Film Corporation has it for New York.

Pathe's Foreign Agent Sees Rift in Clouds

The demand for American films and the business of the film industry generally in France, Belgium and Italy is improving. So reports Maurice Gaillot, who represents Pathe Exchange, Inc., in those countries. Mr. Gaillot sailed for France on the Aquitania last week after a short business trip to this country.

"In France," said Mr. Gaillot, "the picture business has been poor for some time past, reflecting conditions of general business. Latterly there has been improvement in an encouraging degree, which seems likely to continue as it appears to be the effect of familiarity with the disturbed financial situation due to unstable rates of exchange and more experience in dealing with this disadvantage.

"As France produces only about 20 per cent of the pictures shown in its theatres it must rely to a very great extent on American product. For this trade there is keen competition between the leading American distributors."

Mr. Gaillot included the Belgian and Italian trade in what he said about conditions in France.

High School Pupils See "Knighthood"

Believing that "When Knighthood Was in Flower" is the best historical motion picture ever made and that it offers exceptional opportunities for obtaining a graphic idea of Tudor times, four hundred and ninety-two students of the Evander Childs High School, 184th Street and Creston Avenue, saw the superb Cosmopolitan photoplay starring Marion Davies at the Criterion Theatre, New York.

Johnnie Walker Film Due Dec. 24

F. B. O. to Distribute "Captain Fly-by-Night," Spanish California Story

JOHNNIE WALKER in a story of early California days will be the release of Film Booking Offices of America for the week of December 24th. It is titled "Captain Fly-by-Night" and is adapted from a story by Johnston McCulley, author of Fairbanks' "Mark of Zorro."

Johnnie Walker after playing in "In the Name of the Law" and starring in "My Dad," both F. B. O. releases, was signed by P. A. Powers to star in this story of Spanish California days. His previous success in the above mentioned pictures, as well as in "Over the Hill" had won him a large following, which, according to the fan interest displayed in his work, is growing consistently.

"Captain Fly-By-Night" affords the star a colorful role. He is cast as a Spanish Caballero of the days of 1824 when the Spanish king held sway over California. The story has a large element of mystery as well as romance and not until the final reel is the identity of the bandit, "Captain Fly-By-Night" revealed. Playing opposite the star is dainty Shannon Day, perfectly suited to the role of a charming Senorita.

One of the features of this production is the amount of rapid sword play displayed by Walker and other leading characters. In several different individual battles Walker shows the result of the expert training which he underwent before the production was started. The climax of the picture is a battle scene in which four hundred men and two hundred horses are before the camera. A historical interest is given the picture by the sets representing the old California missions around which the action develops.

William K. Howard, who has worked with Walker in previous productions directed the pictures.

"Beautiful and Damned" Opens

Warner Brothers Production Is Given New York and Los Angeles Premieres

WARNER Brothers production of F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, "The Beautiful and Damned," with Marie Prevost, was given a preview presentation at the Paramount theatre, Los Angeles, on November 27, to one of the largest and most representative audiences on the west coast. The eastern premiere was held at the Strand theatre, New York, during the week of December 17.

At the Los Angeles showing were present the members of the cast, directors, authors and city officials. The cast, in addition to Miss Prevost, includes Kenneth Harlan, Harry Meyers, Louise Fazenda, Tully Marshall, Cleo Ridgeley, Emmett King, Walter Long, Clarence Burton, Parker McConnell, Charles McHugh, Kathleen Key and George Kuwa. William A. Seiter, who directed the picture, and Olga Printzlau, who is responsible for the adaptation, were also present.

For the Strand presentation in New York, the Warner publicity department materially aided the management in putting over the production. One of the special publicity stunts was the placing of 20,000 four-page rotogravure sections specially devised for the picture in the Sunday issue of the New York Call.

Window displays were obtained in many of the leading shops along Broadway by the use of cut-outs.

It is also stated that the Pantages Circuit in Minneapolis has also booked "The Headless Horseman."

Lloyd Film in Demand for Holiday Week

"Grandma's Boy," the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors feature comedy, will furnish one of the the chief holiday diversions of thousands of persons throughout the country. Exhibitors, as usual, have been alert to secure for the Christmas week showing features as nearly as possible in keeping with the spirit of the season, and large numbers have hit upon "Grandma's Boy" as the greatest cheer inspirer possible.

"Our reports show that 'Grandma's Boy' is in heavy demand in picture houses in all parts of the country as the Holiday Week feature," said Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors. "This demand is a very great tribute to this photoplay. To begin with, the autumn season of 1922 has witnessed the release of a larger proportion of outstanding features than ever were released at the outset of any previous season. The exhibitors, then, had a much wider range from which to make their Christmas selections, and that the Harold Lloyd feature should be the choice of such a large number as our contracts indicate is a recognition which we appreciate deeply."

Spectacular night scenes are said to be a feature of "The Go-Getter," a Cosmopolitan picturization of Peter B. Kyne's story. The scenes were taken at the Curtiss Aviation Field, Mineola, Long Island, and in the International studios in the Bronx. One of these shows a race between an aeroplane and a speeding express train. The picture is said to embody instances of directorial ingenuity and exceptional photography that will hold sure-fire audience appeal. E. H. Griffith is directing. T. Roy Barnes and Seena Owen are featured.

Interiors Being Shot for "The Broad Road"

During the last week, in a studio near New York City, the photographing has been going on of the interior scenes of "The Broad Road," the first of the productions of Associated Authors for Associated Exhibitors. May Allison is starred in this picture, which is from the well known story of the same name by Hapsburg Liebe.

Before coming to New York the company spent six weeks at Associated Authors' plant near Orlando, Fla., where the exterior shots were made. Miss Allison's supporting cast included Richard C. Travers, Ben Hendricks, Jr., Charles MacDonald, Joe Flanagan, Mary Foy, Alicia Collins and Emile La Croix. "The Broad Road," which is a story of southern lumberjacks, is the first feature ever produced, even in part, at Orlando.

Governors Will Preview Picture

Premiere of "Back Home and Broke" Set for Parley of State Executives

THOMAS MEIGHAN'S newest Paramount picture, "Back Home and Broke," is to have its premiere before the most distinguished audience ever assembled in this country. On the night of December 15 the first print, which is now being rushed to completion in the company's Long Island studio, will be shown at the Governor's Conference, White Sulphur Springs where the executive heads of every State in the Union will be gathered.

The showing of the picture was arranged by Mr. Meighan and Governor Morgan of West Virginia, who is acting as host to the governors. Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, director of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, is completing the program and will accompany the party to conduct an orchestra of fifteen musicians which is being taken from New York.

George Ade, who wrote "Back Home and Broke," especially for Mr. Meighan, Alfred E. Green, who directed the picture and Charles E. McCarthy, Publicity Manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will also make the trip to White Sulphur Springs. The party will leave New York in a special car Thursday night and will return Saturday.

This unusual premiere for the picture is a result of Mr. Meighan's visit to the Springs immediately after he had completed his work in the leading role at the Long Island studio. Governor Morgan fell in with the idea enthusiastically and permission was obtained by telegraph from Adolph Zukor, who is now on the West Coast.

The work of cutting and titling the film, which was being done under the personal supervision of George Ade, was accelerated, with the result that the completed picture was placed in the hands of Dr. Riesenfeld last (Friday) night for the arrangement of the musical score. The showing will be complete in every detail, including news reels, a comedy feature and two singers.

In his letter to Mr. Meighan, when "Back Home and Broke" was placed on the official program as the entertainment feature of the Governor's Conference, Governor Morgan said:

"I thank you very sincerely for your very generous contribution to the social entertainment of our visitors. I trust that it will be your pleasure, as well as that of Mr. Ade, to be present at the coming conference and that I may have the opportunity to thank you personally for this favor."

New Pearl White Serial Wins Approval

The forthcoming Patheserial, "Plunder," which brings back Pearl White in her celebrated screen star specialty, furnished the occasion for Serial Sales Manager E. O. Brooks' trip to Chicago, from which he returned last week brimming over with enthusiasm. Mr. Brooks carried with him the first three episodes of "Plunder" for pre-view by leading exhibitors and the Pathe field forces in the Chicago territory.

He reports that heads of the Junior Orpheum Circuit were among the exhibitors who saw his "Plunder" exhibit and expressed their approval. He was particularly impressed with the result of a showing to Branch Managers Martin and Gillick of the two Chicago offices, Aschmann, of Milwanukee, Moray of Indianapolis, and representatives of their sales forces.

H. B. Warner Feature to Be Reissued

"The Danger Trail," an H. B. Warner feature made by Wm. N. Selig, has been purchased by Exclusive Features, Inc., and will be re-issued by that company on the state rights market, it was announced this week.

This picture is from a story by James Oliver Curwood, and the star is supported by Violet Heming and W. Lawson Butt, giving the exhibitor a strong collection of names to advertise, it is pointed out by Exclusive Features.

The story is of the ever popular Far North type, and in its revised form is expected to eclipse its former success. It is now available for the state rights market.

New Leah Baird Picture Is Completed

Word was received from the West Coast this week that work on "When Civilization Failed," in which Leah Baird is featured, has been finished, even to the insertion of all sub-titles, and that the film will be shipped to Associated Exhibitors soon.

The shipment will not be made, though, until the picture has been shown, unannounced, in several theatres in Hollywood and a number of towns near Los Angeles, Arthur F. Beck, the producer, having become a convert to the "psychological tryout" idea.

Irving Lesser Announces Sales Plans

Eastern Manager Irving Lesser of Principal Pictures Corporation this week announced, in letters to exchange men associated with that firm in the distribution of its 1922-23 productions, that before any of its pictures are offered for territorial sale they will be shown to the trade press editors. The latter will be consulted in that they will be called upon to pass constructive judgment on all productions.

Principal Pictures will sell its lineup of quality pictures individually and not collectively as is the case with most of the companies releasing a definite number of pictures annually.

Hiers to Have Strong Supporting Cast

For his first picture as a Paramount star, titled, "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," Walter Hiers will have a strong cast enacting the leading roles. Featured in support of Hiers will be acqueline Logan.

George Fawcett, one of the screen's foremost character actors, now under contract to Paramount, has a powerful characterization in the role of a leader of an insurrecto gang. Patricia Palmer also has a good role. Robert McKim will work for the first time at the Famous Players-Lasky studio in this picture.

Others who enact leading roles include Clarence Burton, George Field, Lucien Littlefield, Guy Oliver, Joseph Swickard and Edward Patrick.

"The Masquerader" Is Hailed in London

Richard Walton Tully has cabled the officials of First National that his production, "The Masquerader," has been received in London with the same enthusiasm that marked its release in this country and Canada. The novel by Katherine Cecil Thurston, from which the stage play and the picture were adapted, was originally called "John Chilcote, M. P.," in England, and it has been released under that title. For some time before the picture was shown to the London public Mr. Tully superintended a stage production of the play, "John Chilcote, M. P.," with an all-English cast. The play opened at the Duke of York theatre two days after the premier of the picture.

"Notoriety" Newspaper Tie-ups Made

The Advertising and the Exploitation Department of L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North have come forth this week with a publicity plan on their first Will Nigh photodrama, "Notoriety," which is expected to work with automatic precision from the main office and to secure publicity for every run of "Notoriety" in the local papers of the exhibitors.

The tie-up consists of the use of the biggest local paper in town in the lobby of the theatre playing "Notoriety." The theatre secures the front pages of the local papers for the week, using as many copies as necessary in covering its booth, ushers, inside of the lobby and outside front. Across the face of every page of the paper is written in large type the word "Notoriety." This yields the local paper publicity among the theatre patronage.

In addition, the screen of the theatre is also to be at the disposal of the local paper in the form of a trailer beginning with the words "Have you read the Herald lately?" Items from the paper illustrating notoriety follow, interspersed with scenes from the picture itself in which typical forms of "Notoriety" are pictured.

Committee Reports on Merits of "Shadows"

Following the special showing which the National Board of Review recently accorded the second Preferred Picture, "Shadows," at the Town Hall, the Exceptional Photoplays Committee prepared a special report summarizing the merits of the picture. They placed the film's educational value as "good from the standpoint of the Chinese character" and characterized its entertainment as excellent. They also praised the moral effect and the dramatic interest of the story. The general comment summed up the feature as follows:

"The plot of 'Shadows' is far beyond the ordinary. The treatment is direct with an emphasis on character drawing. The work of Lon Chaney as Yen Sin, the Chinaman, is of a consummate character and achieves the higher levels of pathos. It helps to make the picture outstanding."

"The Curse of Drink" Featured Alone

Houses that generally run double features are making an exception during the run of "The Curse of Drink," the six-reel melodramatic thriller released by L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North.

Box office reports arriving from the buyers of the Blaney success show a high percentage of single feature bills prevailing throughout the houses booking the picture. Exhibitors seem of the opinion that concentration on this feature alone instead of dividing their strength between two features proves more profitable. A large proportion of the houses have been breaking their policy of double feature shows and have substituted short subjects to fill in their program rather than adding another feature, according to Weber and North.

Last of Fox's 1922 Specials Due

Release This Month of "Lights of New York" Closes This Year's List

THE release by the Fox Film Corporation of the "Lights of New York" the latter part of this month will mark the last of the big special productions on the Fox program for 1922.

The success which the seven big productions, "The Fast Mail," "Silver Wings," "A Fool There Was," "Monte Cristo," "Who Are My Parents?,' "My Friend the Devil" and "Nero" have attained throughout the country, is presented as bearing out the contention of Mr. William Fox that it is best in the long run to spare no expense in production. Lavish "sets" were constructed; and in some instances, like "Nero" for example, the story was filmed on the actual scenes where the events occurred according to history, while in Alexandre Dumas' immortal masterpiece a whole fishing village was constructed.

Exhibitors who booked "The Fast Mail," the first of these big specials, have not forgotten the ovation given to Lincoln J. Carter's melodrama by the patrons who filled their theatres. "Silver Wings" with Mary Carr has been hailed by critics throughout as a worthy successor to the famous "Over the Hill." Its cordial reception by New York film followers during its Broadway run has been duplicated all over the country, according to all reports constantly flowing into the home office of the Fox Film Corporation.

Similar praise has been showered upon the screen version of Dumas' "Monte Cristo" which has been recently released for general distribution following a lengthy run on Broadway.

"A Fool There Was," which is photographed from Porter Emerson Browne's international stage success based on Kipling's famous poem "The Vampire," is declared to be repeating its New York success in all sections of America.

The huge demand by exhibitors for the three other big specials, "Nero," "Who Are My Parents?" and "My Friend the Devil," are reported to have justified the endeavors of the Fox Film Corporation in the production of these big specials.

As was the case with the abovementioned seven productions, Fox Film Corporation intends to have a Broadway presentation for each of the six new specials slated for release during January, 1923.

Big Cast In Jack Pickford Film

Star Supported by Many Players of Prominence In "Garrison's Finish"

FEW casts in current motion pictures are made up of such well known screen favorites as that in Jack Pickford's first independent photoplay production, "Garrison's Finish," an Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release, and marking this star's formal return to the films after two years directorial work for his sister, Mary Pickford. "Garrison's Finish" has been set for release on January 15th.

Almost from top to bottom, every player whose name appears is either a popular screen artist of many year's standing or among the best known of the younger stars.

The veteran in the cast is Charles Ogle, who has been continuously on the screen for sixteen years. He was loaned to Jack Pickford for this one film.

Clarence Burton, another player loaned to Mr. Pickford for this one picture, has been long established on the screen as one of the greatest "heavies" ever developed in the silent drama. He plays the villain in "Garrison's Finish."

Another pioneer, although still quite young, is Ethel Grey Terry, who has been before the public professionally ever since she was a babe in arms in dramatic stock.

Tom Prior, also a celebrity of the screen, has done much of his best work while supporting various members of the Pickford family. He played important roles in several Mary Pickford releases.

Among the comparative newcomers who have achieved fame early in their careers is Madge Bellamy, who will certainly enhance her reputation as a result of her excellent work as Jack Pickford's leading lady in "Garrison's Finish."

Two others in this cast who may be safely tagged as having most promising destinies are Audrey Chapman and Dorothy Manners, both of whom, curiously enough, earned their advancement to good parts in this picture through their work in support of Douglas Fairbanks.

"The Famous Mrs. Fair" Exteriors Completed

All of the exterior scenes for the Fred Niblo photoplay version of "The Famous Mrs. Fair," have already been photographed, according to information received at the New York offices of Metro Pictures Corporation, which will release this motion picture.

The art department and mechanical forces are working at top speed on the construction of the interior settings, so that Fred Niblo will be enabled to continue working according to the schedule already fixed.

It is to be presented by Louis B. Mayer. A distinguished cast is engaged in enacting the roles of the picture. Myrtle Steadman is appearing as Nancy Fair. Others are Huntly Gordon, Marguerite de la Motte Cullen Landis Ward Crance, Carmel Myers and Helen Ferguson.

"Vanity Fair" Finished within Two Weeks

Hugo Ballin has made such good progress on his screen version of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair" that he expects to complete the photography within two weeks. Mabel Ballin is said by production executives who have seen the "rushes" to be doing the best work of her career as Becky Sharpe.

Miss Ballin has seventeen changes of costume in the picture and Eleanor Boardman, in the role of Amelia, fifteen.

The big scene representing the military ball at Brussels on the eve of the battle of Waterloo shows two hundred dancing. Forty-three principals take part. There are forty-two interiors.

Adelaide Leitzbach Has Many Successes

It is not generally known that Miss Adelaide Leitzbach who scenarized "Way Down South" for Murray W. Garsson, is also credited with the adaptation and co-authorship of "Success" the big Ralph Ince production, which will shortly be given its first trade showing.

Miss Leitzbach is well known as a playwright. It will be recalled that she was author of "The Night Call" which was last summer presented at the Frazee Theatre, New York, and also is to appear in London.

Joseph Urban Designs Magnificent Set

One of the most remarkably beautiful scenes ever screened was filmed during the past week at Cosmopolitan Productions' studio as a part of the forthcoming super-special, "The Enemies of Women," from the famous story by Ibanez. It is the interior of the Russian palace of Prince Lubimoff, the chief character in the story impersonated by Lionel Barrymore, during a wild revel just prior to the revolution in Petrograd.

Joseph Urban, celebrated scenic artist, fashioned the set. It is supposed to exemplify the utter extravagance of the upper classes in Russia and the total disregard for expense while the populace starved.

"Only 38" to Be Done by Paramount

"ONLY 38" is a rare comedy. And what a cast! Elliott Dexter, May MacAvoy, George Fawcett and Lois Wilson! Suggested by a story by Walter Pritchard Eaton the idea was dramatized by A. E. Thomas. The screen play is by Clara Beranger.

It is all about a young widow of a minister, only 38, who decides to "step out" and fairly shocks her own grown-up children. And to cap the climax, she falls in love. It is a typical William de Mille production, with its laughs, chuckles and real pathos.

Kansas Governor Praises "Monte Cristo"

Governor Henry J. Allen, of Kansas, in a letter to the management of the Isis Theatre, Topeka, declared "Monte Cristo," the Fox special, to be one of the finest productions he ever witnessed.

The statement issued from the gubernatorial headquarters at Topeka follows in part:

"I am very glad to tell you that I regarded Monte Cristo not only as an excellent entertainment but a very faithful reproduction of the dramatic strength of Dumas' great story."

"Lorna Doone" Picked for Benefit Week

The ministers of the Protestant churches in Albany, N. Y., thirty in all, have selected Maurice Tourneur's First National release, "Lorna Doone" as the entertainment for their benefit week at the Mark Strand theatre, Albany, beginning Dec. 11.

The proceeds of the benefit are to go toward the quota of the Albany churches for the fund for the colleges of the Orient for women. This is an unusual tribute to "Lorna Doone" and to motion pictures in general.

"Broken Chains" Press Book Ready

Goldwyn's press and exploitation book for its picture based upon the winner in the Chicago Daily News $30,000 scenario contest, "Broken Chains" is just off the presses. Its reproductions of posters, advertisements and lobby accessories are most striking, from the window card in red and black, used for the front cover, to the six-column ad on the back page.

"Broken Chains" is a photoplay with a punch and the posters, newspaper ads and all other forms of publicity drive the idea of the punch home to the beholder.

Levinson Disposes of British Rights

The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation have acquired from Jesse A. Levinson, the United Britsh Empire rights on his current release, "The Plaything of an Empire."

Hodkinson Offers Wide Variety

"The Kingdom Within" Is Feature Release Scheduled for December 24th

VARIETY is again expressed in the distribution plans of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation following the announcement that "The Kingdom Within" will be the feature release scheduled for December 24th. Quite unlike "The Headless Horseman" and "Bulldog Drummond" in general appeal, this Victor Schertzinger production is claimed by the producers to be one of the strongest dramatic offerings seen for sometime.

"The Headless Horseman," a quaint comedy based on "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow"; "Bulldog Drummond," a story that is melodramatic throughout; "The Kingdom Within" a tense drama, offer the exhibitor, in combination, plenty of variety in Hodkinson releases.

"The Kingdom Within" deals with a boy who was born a cripple, but in order to overcome the handicap of a paralyzed arm he was enwith the exception of his father, who could not help but show his disappointment in his son's physical shortcomings. The boy's love for the girl next door was so great dowed with a perfect spiritual mental vision. His great love for everybody made him loved by all, that it caused her to return to the paths of righteousness, and in a superhuman effort to protect her he regains his strength during a bitter struggle with the villain.

The Hodkinson organization considers the cast exceptionally strong. It consists of such notables as Russell Simpson, G. Walt Covington, Gaston Glass, Pauline Starke, Hallam Cooley, Ernest Torrence, and little Marion Faduchi. The story is by Kenneth B. Clarke and the production produced and directed by Victor Schertzinger.

Betty Compson Returns to U.S.

Paramount Star and Company Spend Six Weeks in Honolulu

BETTY COMPSON and the members of the company engaged in making "The White Flower," returned from Honolulu just in time to miss the convention of Paramount's department of distribution recently held in Los Angeles.

The star and company returned from a six weeks' stay in the Hawaiian Islands on a Saturday, the last day of the Paramount convention and the day selected by those in charge of the affair for a tour of Southern California by the delegates.

"We had a marvelous time in the islands," Miss Compson said on her return to the Lasky studio. "We established the 'Lasky Junior studio' in Honolulu and we really did an enormous quantity of work. But we are one and all glad to get home, even if we did miss the convention.

"It seemed to me that every one in Honolulu was trying to make our work as easy as possible. The Chamber of Commerce, Mayor Wilson and every one did everything in their power to aid us.

"We had some difficulty in securing native actors for some of the minor roles but Julia Crawford Ivers, who wrote and directed 'The White Flower,' finally succeeded in picking perfectly wonderful native characters for the various parts.

"Honolulu and the entire group of islands are lovely and I would like nothing better than to make one picture at least each year there."

Bebe Daniels, Lytell in Broadway Success

"THE EXCITERS," with Bebe Daniels and Bert Lytell is an adaptation by Julia Crawford Ivers of the play by Martin Brown which ran this season at the Times Square Theatre, New York. It is best described as a melodramatic comedy. It is a flapper story with a new twist, and Bebe Daniels is ideally cast as the girl whose whole life is spent in a search for excitement. Bert Lytell lends his attractive personality in the role of a handsome young detective. The cast is a large one, and some of the foremost Paramount players will be seen in support of the stars.

Edwards Directs 2nd Century Comedy

Brownie, the Century Wonder Dog, will appear with Buddy Messenger in Harry Edwards second Century picture "Detective K. Nine." Edwards, who works by script, is now in the third week of his picture. In the cast are Jack Cooper, Jack Earle, the giant, and Betty May. The GiGant Earle has, in recognition of his excellent work, been given a long term contract by Julius and Abe Stern.

The title of Buddy Messenger's first Century Comedy has been changed from "When Boyhood Was in Flower" to "Me for You."

Lesser also disposed of the Cuban rights to the Lester Cuneo western series to the Cuban Film Company of Havana.

Two hundred players were engaged by Director Sloman for the dance scenes, which are in the time of Henry the Second and Catherine de Medici.

Prison Wardens Endorse Films

First National Gets Opinions From Penitentiary Heads on Screen Drama

FOLLOWING the release of "Skin Deep," a crook play, First National has made a survey by questionnaires to learn the effect of motion pictures on persons whose moral fibre is not of conventional strength. These questionnaires were sent to wardens and chaplains of penitentiaries throughout the United States and the opinions, without an exception, were to the effect that:

Motion pictures tend to make convicted men more patient in their surroundings; more eager to work, more amenable to discipline, happier and more ambitious to do right.

Convicts are prone to hiss the villain and applaud the righteous hero.

Most of them dislike crook plays and are always eager to see right triumph over wrong.

To use the words of Warden Lewis E. Lawes of Sing Sing Prison, who delighted his charges with "Oliver Twist" as a Thanksgiving film treat, "The cinema undoubtedly is the greatest blessing mankind has been given since Magna Charta. The power of the film is enormous. Constant picture-going creates brain activity which leads to a knowledge of things along other lines; it creates a demand for books, a wish for thorough scientific knowledge."

Warden Robert J. McKenty of the Eastern State Penitentiary writes:

"We regard motion pictures in this institution as the highest type of entertainment. The benefit derived for the men therefrom cannot be measured. The motion picture has brought the outer world, society, into their midst. Hence, 'Stone walls do not a prison make.'"

"Dr. Jack" Sets Booking Record

Pathe Home-Office Elated Over Reception Given by Trade and Critics

WITH respect to "Dr. Jack," Pathe reports that exhibitors, patrons and reviewers are "sold" in the fullest meaning of the term. The statement is made that booking contracts for Harold Lloyd's new feature comedy accepted at the home office up to December 6 break all records for any type of picture.

The latest reviews of "Dr. Jack" public showings leave no doubt about the comedy's popular success. Polly Parsons, writing in the Milwaukee Evening Sentinel of Nov. 24, says: "Harold Lloyd is adding further laurels to his crown as a comedian with 'Dr. Jack.' Lloyd's comedian methods are too well known to need discussion. He makes the most of them in this new feature, which is a Pathe release."

Pearl Rall, in Los Angeles Express: "As in all of Harold Lloyd's films, there is an underlying sound philosophy with its engaging philosophy that, in this case, might be interpreted beatifically as, 'blessed is he who does not take himself too seriously, for he shall be healthy and all things shall be added unto him.'"

"Hilarity thy name is Harold," writes Edwin Schallert in the Los Angeles Daily Times. "At least that is what the redoubtable Lloyd stands for in the minds of us. And as soon as we see his name in the flip flickering lights we frolic thither. And once again we are doing this, and more so, perhaps, at the Mission Theatre where there appears the title, 'Dr. Jack.'"

Critics Praise Marsh Feature

"Till We Meet Again" Well Received By Reviewers; Many Bookings Gotten

REPORTS received by Associated Exhibitors, and the comments of reviewers, indicate that "Till We Meet Again," featuring Mae Marsh, has started its career with a notable succession of triumphs. Miss Marsh appears to be pleasing her large public quite as much as in any previous production, while her support and the direction of the photoplay, a William Christy Cabanne production, also come in for enthusiastic praise.

Thus the Courier-Journal, following the opening of a run in Louisville, said: "Sensations and heart throbs for the most part make up 'Till We Meet Again.' The emotionalism of the picture has been very nicely done, and it offers absorbing entertainment. Mae Marsh, pensive, wistful, lovely at times, seems not to have lost any of the early charm that made her such an adorable little figure in 'The Birth of a Nation'. A well chosen cast supports her capably."

The Albany Journal's reviewer described the feature as "one that thrills from start to finish, the climax being a real smash," and declared that Miss Marsh "scored a hit," while the Anaconda Standard found the photoplay "intensely dramatic with comedy relief, very well directed and produced, and exceptionally acted by a remarkable cast."

The drawing powers of the production and of the players, who include among the principals, Norman Kerry and Martha Mansfield, besides Mae Marsh, are shown further by the number of important bookings that have been made.

"Till We Meet Again" is presented by Dependable Pictures Corporation, of which Morris Kohn is the president.

Quotas Exceeded in the Pathe Sales Contest

AT the end of the third week of the Eschmann Sales Contest Pathe reports that the weekly quota set for the eight weeks' period is exceeded by more than ten per cent. The Portland, Ore., branch was then leading, with Los Angeles second and Denver, Milwaukee, Newark, Salt Lake City, Spokane, Dallas, Charlotte and Memphis following in the order named.

Every mail is said to load General Sales Manager E. A. Eschmann's desk with evidences of increasing enthusiasm felt by the contesting branches. Even in the case of those branches lowest in the list, fixed "quotas" have ceased to disturb the minds of any individuals directly interested in the outcome—managers, assistant managers, salesmen, bookers or cashiers.

Press Book Is Ready on "Only a Shopgirl"

The press book on "Only A Shopgirl" has been completed, the C.B.C. Film Sales Corporation announces this week, and copies of it have already gone out throughout the country to the territorial holders, all of whom have expressed the desire long since to receive their full supply of accessories on this feature at the first possible moment, so they could fill the booking dates for which exhibitors are asking on it.

The policy which the C.B.C. Exploitation department inaugurated in this book, of moving the exploitation pages and hints to the front of the book and playing them up stronger than anything else, has been greatly commended by the majority of the territorial holders, several of them having already written or wired C.B.C. complimenting the company on the way the space has been utilized so that everything in its is useful to the highest degree.

Pearl White at Best in "Plunder" Says Trade

Seitz, the producer of the new Pathe serial called "Plunder," says Pathe, are being credited throughout the picture industry with having reached the highest point in their screen careers. In New York, Chicago and other important centers where trade showings of "Plunder" have been given, the result has been to evoke the highest praise for the absorbing story, for the excellence of the production and for Pearl White as the adventurous heroine.

Author Kelland and Charles Whittaker, who adapted "Backbone" for the screen, were also on hand.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer" Booklet Planned

An appropriate Christmas reminder will be issued by Sawyer and Lubin of S-L Pictures concerning "Quincy Adams Sawyer," their recently produced special film for Metro Pictures Corporation. It will take the form of a booklet, incorporated in which will be the unusual trade press reviews accorded "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

The covers of the booklet will carry an appropriate Christmas drawing, with the suggestion that this picture, because of its merit and the remarkable drawing power of its cast of stars, is a suitable gift to exhibitors on the part of S-L Pictures and Metro. Several thousand copies will be placed in the hands of Metro Exchanges for distribution.

"The Storm" Hit World Over

Reports of Fine Business from So. America, Europe and Australia

"THE STORM" is breaking world records, reports Universal. In London, "The Storm" had a gala showing at the New Oxford Theatre, the famous Cochran showhouse recently taken over for film productions by the European Motion Picture Company, Universal's British releasing agency. "The Storm" created a very favorable impression in London and was highly praised by both newspaper and trade paper reviewers.

In France, the big Universal feature was played at the Cine Max Linder in Paris, where it was accorded a highly successful run. Evidence of the impression the production made in French Film circles is contained in an article on "The Storm" in Lumiere, a French publication.

"Technically it is above all criticism," wrote the Lumiere reviewer. "The severe storm, the scenes of the rapids, where one fears that the canoe will suddenly disappear, the terrific fire scene, all are of impressive realism. The film is more than impressive. It is extraordinary. It is a film which makes us prophesy great things of Universal."

When "The Storm" played in the Strand Theatre, Colon, Panama, it went over with a bang. It received considerable notoriety because of advance storm warnings sent out by the theatre. People in the Canal Zone take their storms seriously so the local Weather Bureau was besieged with telephone calls until the local forecaster published a story in the Panama papers pointing out the true origin of the storm warnings.

In far off Tasmania, "The Storm" tripled the box office figures of the Palace Theatre, Hobart, and broke records in the Picture Theatre, Hobart, and broke records in the Picture Theatre, Launceston.

On the mainland of Australia, "The Storm" had its premiere in Hoyt's de Luxe Theatre, Victoria, where it made a big hit, so cable reports to James V. Bryson, Universal export manager, indicate. The success which it has met in Latin American countries is best illustrated by its showing in the Campoamor Theatre, the biggest theatre in Havana, where it broke the house records in the face of such opposition as the opening of Cuba's new $10,000 ice-rink.

In Holland, "The Storm" opened at the Cinema De Mundt in Amsterdam. It was so successful that the run was prolonged for a second week.

Metro Acquires "Hearts Aflame

Will Distribute Reginald Barker Production for Louis B. Mayer Studios

METRO Pictures Corporation will distribute "Hearts Aflame," the Reginald Barker production for Louis B. Mayer, according to an announcement from the releasing company. This statement puts to rest many rumors concerning the identity of the issuing medium for this spectacular photoplay, for which the keenest bidding took place.

The photoplay was recently presented before an enthusiastic audience of exhibitors and important motion picture personages at a private showing held at the Ritz Carlton Hotel in New York.

The photoplay is an adaptation of Harold Titus's famous novel, "Timber." The distinguished stage actor, Frank Keenan, is seen in the role of Luke Taylor, a millionaire lumber king. Mr. Keenan gives a memorable performance as the aggressive, small-souled individual to whom the hum of a busy logging camp is the most welcome music. Anna Q. Nilsson, the beautiful blonde actress of many big photoplays, appears in the role of a spirited, strong-willed girl of the Michigan woods. Others in the exceptional cast are Craig Ward, Richard Hendrick, Russell Simpson, Richard Tucker, Stanton Heck, Martha Mattox, Walt Whitman, Joan Standing, Ralph Cloninger, Lee Shumway and others.

Great credit is due to Reginald Barker, who personally directed the photoplay. His handling of the big scenes of the picture are skillful and workmanlike, and his staging of the forest fire a genuine contribution to screen artistry. Mr. Barker has established an enviable reputation for big, spectacular productions, and all have been marked wtih the same splendid attention to details and strict fidelity to nature. Among his most recent successes were "The Storm," "The Old Nest," and "Godless Men." The scenario of "Hearts Aflame" was prepared by J. G. Hawks and L. G. Rigby.

"Shadows" Song Sent by Radio Broadcast

Necessary arrangements were made by Eve Unsell and Louis Gottschalk. Myrtle Stedman sang the song for which Miss Unsell wrote the lyrics. Gottschalk personally led the musicians engaged for the occasion.

"More to Be Pitied" Is Booked by Lynch

Proof that independent features are more and more getting the biggest bookings all over the country comes again this week with word that "More To Be Pitied," first of the C.B.C. Film Sales Corporation series of Box Office Winners, has been booked over the entire Lynch Circuit.

This is one of the biggest and most important circuit bookings, not only in the South, but anywhere in the country, and is considered by Oscar Oldknow, head of Southern enterprises, which holds southern rights to the entire six features on the series, as one more proof of the truth of the big things that have been prdicted for these features.

The Lynch Circuit booking, which was made through the Atlanta office of Southern Enterprises, Inc., placed "More To Be Pitied" in the finest houses in twenty-nine different cities, covering the entire territory one hundred percent.

New Electric Theatre Compares Favorably with Finest

Lavishly Constructed, Costing $520,000, With 2,250 Seating Capacity

IT was a gala opening that the new Electheatre, Kansas City, Kas., had this month. Few Middle Western cities can boast of a motion picture house that has been more lavishly constructed. The Electric, costing $520,000 and seating 2,250, marks another notch in the successful careers as showmen of E. S. Grubel, F. C. Grubel, president and treasurer, respectively, and A. F. Baker, manager.

The Electric stands upon the same site as the old theatre of the same name, which was completely razed to make way for the new house at 540-48 Minnesota avenue. From the entrance to back stage, from floor to ceiling, only the best of equipment has been used in providing Kansas City, Kas., with a palace of amusement that has been under construction since last April. A complete Pathe program, with "Grandma's Boy" as the feature, "initiated" the new theatre, which received a two-page layout in the Kansas City Kansan, daily newspaper.

"The Electric theatre, as far as unique and artistic arrangements are concerned, compares favorably with any theatre in the United States," said Robert Boller of Boller Brothers, Kansas City and Los Angeles, who was architect of the structure.

The largest Wurlitzer organ between St. Louis and Greater Kansas City is installed in the house. The organ was shipped from the Wurlitzer factory in Tonawanda, N. Y., requiring three express cars to carry the various parts.

THE ELECTRIC THEATRE, the new Kansas City, Kansas, house, is one more example of the trend of modern theatre construction in that it represents the desire of theatre builders to make motion picture theatres the most attractive of edifices for the entertainment of the American public.

The physical beauties and comforts embodied in a theatre often prove the deciding factors in the success of the house. It is encouraging to note that the exhibitor is realizing more and more the importance of these features.

The motion picture clientele, while they demand good pictures, have become also exceedingly discriminating in their selection of the theatres which permit their pictures the proper atmosphere and presentation. This tendency to make large modern motion picture houses is being followed in a degree in the construction of smaller neighborhood houses. This proves exceedingly encouraging in that these palaces will help to educate the entire public to appreciate and become followers of the motion picture art.

Some idea of the beauty and quality of the interior furnishings may be obtained from a description of the draperies and carpets. More than 1,000 yards of Klearflax linen rugs were required to cover the main aisle. The color, light blue, was selected to harmonize with the general color scheme, blue, gold and old ivory. The railing across the balcony and the orchestra railing are draped with velour lined with sateen. The entrance doors to offices on the promenade floor are draped with mohair cloth, as are also the French doors at the main entrance. The exit doors on both the main and second floors are draped in velour with box plaited valance trimmed with bullion fringe.

The four pairs of curtains to the entrance to aisles are velour, both sides alike, as are three pairs of curtains for spaces between aisles. The curtains for all loges are made from Shiki cloth. The thirty-six windows in front of the building are draped with Tuscan net and side drapes of Kapock silk. The balcony rail, the rail on top of the boxes and the standing rail in the rear of the first floor are covered with velour with cotton padding underneath. The men's smoking room is covered with battleship linoleum.

In flooring the vestibule, aisles and mezzanine floors, Tennessee marble was used, being supplied by the Kansas City Marble and Tile Company. Seven hundred yards of Kaw River washed sand were used in the building materials of the new house, which was constructed by the Swenson Construction Company of Kansas City. The ventilating system, washed air, was installed by the Kornbrodt Kornice Company of Kansas City. Thirty tons of ornamental and architectural terra cotta were used in the construction, the material being furnished by the Western Terra Cotta Company of Kansas City.

Business Increases Thirty Per Cent, Exploitation Cost Only Six Dollars

A report which we have received from Bill Johnson of the Exploitation Department of the Southern Enterprises, Dallas, Texas, concerning the stunt which Exploitation Manager J. M. Edgar Hart used in exploiting the picture, "Burning Sands," is of such merit that we feel that many exhibitors can use same to good advantage. The following is the description as was submitted to us:

Diagramatical sketch for construction of desert scene for lobby display in "Burning Sands"

For a lobby display for "Burning Sands" Mr. Hart again "pulled" the unusual. The display represented a desert scene showing the miniature palm trees and the oasis, toy animals and cupid dolls being used for Arabs. Sand dunes were piled here and there about the display and in the distance was a small pyramid. Just behind this miniature display was a large hand-painted cut-out of Milton Sills holding Wanda Hawley in his arms. On the front of the theatre above the marquee Mr. Hart mounted a twenty-four sheet, and this was illuminated at night with a row of electric lights.

The thing that made the miniature desert scene appear so unusual yet quite realistic was the heat waves and steam rising out of the sands. The sand appeared as if it were burning. Mr. Hart explains how he effected this display as follows:

"We placed an electric heater on the floor of the lobby with a tank of water over it. Above this tank was a bed of sand which was four feet broad and seven feet long. In the center of this bed of sand was an opening two feet by three feet. This opening was covered with a very fine copper screen, and on top of this copper screen was a thin layer of sand. The electric heater caused the water in the tank to boil, thus causing steam to percolate through the copper mesh and then work its way through the sand, and could be seen rising above. It also created an effect like dancing heat, such as is observable in the summer time on stone pavements. The heater was connected with the house current, and the entire effect was so masked that it puzzled everyone. This display certainly brought us the business."

Galen Theatre, Marysville, Pa., to Be Replaced

A new brick theatre will replace the Galen motion picture theatre, Marysville, Pa., that was wrecked by flames on November 25, according to announcement just made by Amos Fisher, owner of the property and manager of the theatre. Flames started in the boiler room and spread so rapidly through the large building that the Marysville fire department appealed for aid to Harrisburg, five miles distant. Three engine companies were sent from the latter city, and the firemen saved a portion of the building, though about $10,000 damages was done. The upper part of the building was used as apartments.—Berghaus.

Explains Prime Factor in Acoustic Troubles Is Reverbeation

PAUL E. SABINE, of Geneva, Ill., expert on acoustics, in an address before the Academy of Science, 3817 Olive street, St. Louis, predicted that the day of sound insulation is near, when it will no longer be possible for a lusty infant to spread insomnia through an apartment. He has made a study of the art of curing auditory ills of auditoriums.

The prime factor in acoustic troubles is reverberation. Sounds which should die out in one or two seconds reflect from the hard walls of auditoriums. These reflections come in the form of waves which cross each other at angles in the room and through multiple action increase the original sound as much as five fold.

Working with electric sparks and models taken from architects drawings of proposed theatres Sabine has been able to plot the course of sound waves and is in a position to compute how long a given sound wave will continue to reverberate. In one experiment the reverberations in a theatre were corrected by bringing in a certain number of cushions. This was accomplished through the law of absorption. With a sufficient amount of absorbent material, he demonstrated that sound reverberations can be reduced so that very little more than the original sound impulses are heard.

The method now in use in offices and other places where the noises of typewriters, telegraph instruments and calculating machines are obnoxious, Sabine said, was to bank the ceiling and walls with layers of felt covered by a porous fabric. In theatres acoustic tile is made use of to correct faulty acoustics. The sounds made by the human voice must die away fast enough so that the reverberation of each sound will not interfere with the succeeding impulses. If this is not done the voice will be blurred and indistinct.—Barrett.

Important Developments Take Place in Equipment Business in Canada

RATHER important developments have taken place in the theatre equipment business in Canada with the launching of two new theatre supply companies at Toronto, Ontario.

Charles A. Dentelbeck, supervisor of projection for the Famous Players Canadian Corporation for a number of years and president of Local 173, Projection Machine Operators, I. A. T. S. E., for the past seven years, is the president of the Canadian Theatre Supply Company, 22 Dundas street, Toronto, which has been organized to handle the exclusive distribution in Canada of Simplex projection machines and other lines. The company has been incorporated with a capital of $150,000 and a branch office has already been opened at Montreal. Arrangements are also being made to open offices of the Canadian Theatre Supply Company at Winnipeg and Vancouver.

V. Armand, of Winnipeg, a member of the Board of Examiners or projection for the Manitoba Provincial Government, has been visiting in Toronto to confer with Mr. Dentelbeck regarding the opening of the Western branch offices. Mr. Armand has been chief operator of the Capitol theatre, Winnipeg, for three years and is president of Winnipeg Local 299 of the Projection Machine Operators.

Another development has been the opening of offices by J. H. Coleman for the Coleman Electric Company in the Hermant Building, Dundas street East, Toronto, for the distribution of Motiograph projection machine and for the sale of RaLite motor generators, Superlite gold fibre screens, Globe theatre chairs and general theatre supplies. Mr. Coleman was active in the theatre supply business some time ago and has now returned to the business.—Gladish.

Building Restricted to Architects and Engineers

This body, of which Rudolph P. Miller of New York (vice president N. F. P.), is chairman, officially favors the enactment of legislation by which building operations shall be restricted to architects, engineers, builders, superintendents of construction, or others who have by proper evidence shown their ability or capacity for undertaking such building operations and on whom individual responsibility for the safe prosecution of the work and a compliance with the laws relating to buildings, can be placed. This action was taken in view of the late serious loss of life in the collapse of a completed theatre building in Washington, D. C., and of a theatre in course of construction in Brooklyn, N. Y., both of which cases were in part, if not wholly, due to irresponsible, incompetent or careless design and supervision.

Prizma Increases Jersey City Laboratory Equipment

Wm. V. D. Kelley, Technical Advisor of Prizma, Inc., has completed the installation of new equipment at its Jersey City Laboratory costing about $60,000, and more than doubles Prizma's capacity. Due to the steadily increasing demand for color photography this installation was deemed necessary. The new installation permits of a considerable reduction in the price of title prints and the following is part of an announcement made by Mr. Kelley: "We are constantly seeking ways and means of reducing our costs and just as quickly as we do this we pass the results along to the trade. Our aim is to make color prints for all who can use them at a price within the reach of all, and furthermore, this reduction has not brought about any sacrifice of quality."

Severe Criticism

We are in receipt of a letter from a projectionist who is severely criticising one of the members of this organization who holds, in some respects, a position which may be considered to have considerable responsibility, particularly as he can set an example for other projectionists. The name of the projectionist in question has purposely been left out of Mr. Cabmiss' letter, as we do not feel inclined to make this public criticism too personal. However, it is sufficient to state that this projectionist is employed by a southern State Board of Censors as the chief projectionist. The point which has been brought out in this letter is of exceptional value, as we are in hearty agreement that there are many instances where the office of the State Censors prove to be a great source of detriment to perfect pictures not only through misframes and bad patches, but in the majority of cases through the indiscriminate use of punch marks. Even in the very highest class theatres where the criterion of projection and every other feature in the theatre is demanded, it is customary to see the white flashes thrown on the screen which designate that the Board of Censors of that state have okayed the picture. It is hard to understand just the reasoning that men who sit in judgment on pictures follow when they feel that it is for the good of the motion picture to mutilate the film in the manner in which they do.

Unpopular Letters

To the Editor:

In looking over the December 2nd edition of the Motion Picture News I came across your department.

Now, I believe in brother projectionists working together and to have the film in the best running condition possible for the next operator that gets it. But I don't like to see letters printed in the News that are not what they seem to be. Or, in other words, an operator, especially a man who calls himself a projectionist, that will sit down and write a letter to a department and say that he always treats the film right that passes through his hands, and then let film pass that has bad patches and quite a few misframes. That one man I am referring to is a man who should look after the film more so than a house operator. This one I am writing of is an operator who signs his name ———— Chief Projectionist, ———— State Board of Censors. Now I have got film that came direct from the censor board that had the censor seal on it out of frame, bad patches in and around the seal. Now this operator has to run this film so the censors can view it, and yet he will run it, leave misframes and bad patches for the next operator and then he sits down and writes to an organization such as yours and wants to become a member.

Would appreciate it very much if you would let me know your opinion of such as this. You can also print this letter in your department and sign my name to it.

Very truly yours,
Ernest Cabamiss,
Cockade Theatre,
Petersburg, Va.

Sizes of Objectives

Dear Editor:

I am sending you an article which I wish you would publish in our N. A. M. L. Forum, for it may help some operators to secure better results.

In theatres using "mazda equipment" most machines are equipped with a lens size 1½" diameter. This is entirely too small a lens. There should be at least a lens 2½" in diameter, as diagram shows, and it will increase light power at least 30%.

Very truly yours,
James C. Bickel, No. 1476,
Pomeroy, Ohio.

In a letter received, as above, there was also incorporated two rough sketches by Mr. Bickel illustrating his point regarding the advantage of using the large size diameter projection lens over the small size; in other words, the advantage of a No. 2, or half size projection, lens over the No. 1, or quarter size. This point holds true to a greater degree in the case where the prismatic condenser is used and has not as large a bearing on the amount of light reaching the screen where the plano convex condenser lenses are used. It is safe to say that a No. 2 projective lens will increase the light as much as 50 to 80% over a No. 1 objective lens with equipment that employs the prismatic condenser. This holds true because the working distance from the prismatic condenser to the aperture is only about 6 or 6½ inches as compared with 8 to 10 inches with the plano condensers. The cone of light coming from the prismatic condenser, in passing through the aperture spreads out in a wide angle and a large proportion is not collected by the smaller size projection lens. The No. 2 objective lens in the average case gathers in very nearly this complete cone.

New Ruling

An accident caused by the glare of the light resulting in blindness to a motion picture machine operator in Pennsylvania, has resulted in the formulation of a ruling by the Industrial Board of the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry amending the motion picture code. The ruling, as announced by Labor Commissioner Connelly, states: "All motion picture projectors that are so constructed that the eyes of the projectionist are exposed to the glare of the crater image or 'spot,' shall be provided with an approved eye-shield." The State Workmen's Compensation Bureau had received the report of the accident upon which a claim for compensation was based and brought it to the attention of the Industrial Board. The ruling applies to all operators of theatrical machines who are affected by the standards of the Industrial Board on motion picture machines, but does not apply specifically to the operators of educational motion pictures.—Berghaus.

New Electric Theatre

Decorating of the new house, which is entirely of hollow tile, terra cotta and concrete, was done by H. T. Letson of Kansas City. Bailey-Reynolds fixtures predominate, while Simplex projection machines, with a throw of 100 feet, are the pride of the projection room. An Adams switchboard is another feature. Inter-communicating phones were installed by the Western Electric Company, while Hoover vacuum cleaners will keep the big house clean.

A large separate room in the basement of the theatre has been designed for a children's nursery. The nursery is light, airy and attractively outfitted and is in charge of a competent overseer. Retiring rooms for women are located in the basement and on the mezzanine floor, adjoining the promenade. Men's smoking and rest rooms also are located in the basement and on the second floor. All retiring rooms are equipped with sound proof telephone booths and supplied with hot and cold running water. Private offices for the management are conveniently located next to the promenade. Offices for ushers and other attendants are located on the floor above.

In the center of the main ceiling is a great semi-globular trellis, composed of interwoven scrolls, from the apex of which is suspended a handsome chandelier, seventeen feet long and eight feet wide. Three hundred electric lamps, ranging from 15 to 60 watt, are required to illuminate this huge figure. Each of the circular art glass panels are likewise equipped with interior lamps. Bronz electric fixtures decorate the side walls, while the doors and seating fixtures are of American black walnut. The seating capacity is divided into 1,000 orchestra seats, 9,000 blacony seats and 350 loge seats. In accordance with the size of the house, 123x90 feet, is a 75-foot stage, 25 feet deep. All the stage lighting effects are controlled from the wings of the stage. For photoplays the lights are controlled from the projection room.

A large circular vent in the promenade floor permits unobstructed circulation of air to all parts of the house, while there is in reality three systems of ventilating, the other two being one that is controlled from the basement and that which is provided by four large fans on the roof. The heating system is of hot air.

At night the Electric presents a picturesque figure on Minnesota avenue, the principal street of the city. Signs, installed by the American Sign Company, harmonize with the artistic design of the house.

"Our pictures will come chiefly through First National, Paramount and Pathe," said F. C. Grubel. "It is our intention to feature only first run films. We probably will show many independent releases also. We are after the best and will spare no expense to get it. We want to make this theatre the pride of Kansas City, Kan."

Two acts of vaudeville will be featured on the Electric's program, as the house is affiliated with the Orpheum circuit. The owners of the new house also have theatres in St. Joseph, Mo., and Springfield, Mo., and all pictures are booked for the chain of houses.

New Eastern Agents Appointed For Handling Simplex Ticket Machines

The World Ticket and Supply Company, Inc., 1600 Broadway, New York City, has secured the exclusive eastern agency for the improved ticket machines which, it is claimed, is the original ticket machine placed on the market.

The officers of this company are Jack C. Enslen, President; S. G. Lamm, Vice President, and F. G. Bernholz, Secretary and Treasurer.

In a description of this machine, it is noted that there are three different styles which have incorporated many exceptional improvements.

This machine is unique in its way, as it has a separate mechanism for each unit, which means that tickets can be issued from one, two, three, four or five units individually or collectively as the need may arise—that is, two different priced tickets can be issued into the hands of the patron at the same time, and each unit can be locked when not in use.

There is nothing to interfere with the knee space that is necessary for a cashier to have in her booth in order to operate the machine efficiently, and nothing on the top of the machine to interfere with the making of change, as the top plate is absolutely flush. This machine is also made with keys dropped below the top plate for exhibitors desiring this model.

Many new installations have been reported made in the more important theatres in the east since the World Ticket & Supply Company has taken over this agency.

This company is headquarters for tickets of all kinds, and state that their tickets are correct as to numbering and printing; also that their folder style tickets work in any style of ticket machine.

Dear Sir:

I am mailing application for membership in your association. I am assistant projectionist at the Columbia theatre at McAllen. Have been in this capacity for some time. At present I go to school six hours a day and operate the machine for four hours each day. Mr. Cantu, chief projectionist of this theatre, is already a member of your league, and he speaks so highly of it that it must be a very good thing. In fact, we try to follow all your views on how to fix film, and so forth. It is a nuisance to get hold of a picture that has been punched and cut up.

Am sending you 25 cents in stamps for N. A. M. L. button, which I hope to get soon. Very truly yours,

LITTLE STORIES ABOUT PEOPLE ON THE LOT

On the Goldwyn Lot

The first Von Stroheim subject will be "McTeague," from a story by Frank Norris.

Rupert Hughes is on desert location near Palm Springs, with "Souls for Sale" company. Eleanor Boardman will play the lead in the Hughes picture instead of Claire Windsor. Others in the cast are Mae Busch, Barbara Lamarr, Richard Dix, Frank Mayo, Lew Cody, Arthur Hoyt, Dale Fuller.

Katherine Hilliker and H. H. Caldwell have been placed under contract to serve as assistants to June Mathis.

Marshall Neilan will next make "Red Lights," adapted from the play by Edward Rose, "The Rear Car," in which Ray Griffith will play the leading role.

Work on the Maurice Tourneur Production of "The Isle of Dead Ships" was started in earnest Monday night when the night sequences of The Portales, a famous cafe in Vera Cruz, were taken.

Willard Louis, chubby comedian, whose capers as Friar Tuck in "Robin Hood" are his latest contributions to screen humor, has been engaged to play Joseph Sedley in Hugo Ballin's elaborate production of "Vanity Fair," now under way at the Goldwyn studio.

At Universal City

Lois Weber has selected Jane Mishkinin, age eleven, to play the title role in the re-made production of "Jewel," from Clara Louise Burnham's novel. Other players decided upon are Claude Gillingwater, Frances Laymond, Evelyn Thatcher, and Jacqueline Gadsen.

Hoot Gibson has completed filming of an original story by Ed Sedgwick, titled "Heads Up," also directed by Sedgwick.

Tod Browning has added Wallace Beery and Rose Dione to the cast of "Drifting."

Another chapter play, of which Robert F. Hill is director, has been finished at Universal City. Jack Mulhall is the star of "The Social Buccaneer," a romantic serial based on the novel of the same name by Frederic Isham, laid chiefly in New York and an imaginery kingdom in central Europe. Margaret Livingston appears apposite Mulhall, while Robert Anderson, well remembered for his work in "The Heart of Humanity" and other big productions, has the role of the hero's chum. Sidney Bracey, Fontaine La Rue, Percy Pembroke, Tote DuCrow, Wade Boteler, Lucille Ricksen and other players of feature class handle supporting roles.

As a result of the heavy snow which has blanketed the California Mountains, the Universal production unit headed by Edward Laemmle, which is making "The Oregon Trail" a new historical chapter picture with Art Acord, found itself isolated in the Big Bear Valley region. It was not until the executives at Universal City sent an aeroplane from the Roger Airport Field in Hollywood to carry messages and instructions to the Laemmle unit, that liaison was established by the serial company and its base.

Century Cut-Backs

The second Buddy Messenger comedy is being cast.

Edith Grant will play the ingenue role in the next Harry Edwards comedy.

Century Studios are being rebuilt.

Around Metro Studios

Lou Anger has leased space for the filming of Norma Talmadge's starring vehicle "Within the Law," to be directed by Frank Lloyd.

In production are: "Your Friend and Mine" (Sawyer-Lubin) and "Her Fatal Millions," starring Viola Dana, the latter under the direction of William Beaudine.

Hunt Stromberg is casting the next Bull Montana comedy entitled "They Call It Dancing."

With Paramount Units

The Joseph Henaberry company, filming "The Tiger's Claw," an original photoplay by Jack Cunningham starring Jack Holt, is working at the Selig Zoo, where animal scenes are being photographed. Eva Novak plays opposite the star.

The Walter Hiers company, directed by Wesley Ruggles, has gone south for exteriors for "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime."

William DeMille will begin "Grumpy" on December 18th. His cast will be composed of Theodore Roberts, May McAvoy, Conrad Nogel, Charles Ogle, Betram Johns, and others.

Fitzmaurice is making the final scenes for "Bella Donna."

Julia Crawford Ivers has completed "The White Flower," starring Betty Compson.

Sam Woods is making interiors for "Prodigal Daughters," starring Gloria Swanson. In the cast are Ralph Graves, Theodore Roberts, Robert Agnew, Louise Dresser, Vera Reynolds, Charles Clary and others.

Theodore Kosloff and Charles DeRoche will share honors in "The Law of the Lawless," starring Dorothy Dalton.

"The Trail of The Lonesome Pine" company, starring Mary Miles Minter, under the direction of Charles Maigne, are working on mountain location with the complete cast including Antonio Moreno, lead, Ernest Torrence, Edwin Brady, Beulah Bains, J. S. Strembridge and Cullen Tate.

Final scenes are being made for "The Covered Wagon."

Pauline Garon, who has come East from the Lasky studio on the Coast where she played an important part in Cecil B. DeMille's latest production, "Adam's Rib," has been engaged for the role of a flapper in George Melford's next Paramount picture, "You Can't Fool Your Wife," which is to be put in production soon at the Long Island studio.

Mahlon Hamilton, well remembered for his role of "Daddy Long-Legs," arrived in New York from Los Angeles this week to play a prominent part in Marion Davies' next Cosmopolitan picture, "Little Old New York."

In addition to the principals of the cast, Allan Dwan has taken eight other actors and actresses with him to Miami, Fla., where scenes will be filmed for his Paramount production, "The Glimpses of the Moon." They are Beth Allen, Mrs. George Peggram, Dolores Costello, Billie Muller, Beatrice Coburn, Fred Hadley, Robert Lee Kseling and Barton Adams. These players will have important bits in the picture in which Bebe Daniels and Nita Naldi will be featured with David Powell, Maurice Costello, Rubye de Remer and Charles Gerrard leading in the support.

R-C Production Notes

Production was started last week on "Six Second Smith" which will be the fourth of the "Fighting Blood" series of H. C. Witwer-Collier's magazine stories to be released through the Film Booking Offices of America. George O'Hara and Clara Horton continue in the leading roles, and Mal St. Clair is again directing.

Ethel Clayton will soon start work at the Powers studios on "The Greater Glory," her third starring vehicle for F. B. O. release. The story is an original by Wyndham Gittens, who also made the screen adaptation.

The Red Hen hotel, an old two-story frame structure and a relic of the early gold rush days of California, was wrecked by dynamite and completely destroyed to add realism to one of the big scenes in "Canyon of the Fools," Harry Carey's fourth starring vehicle for F. B. O. release.

East and West With Fox

J. Gordon Edwards has begun work on a society-melodrama at the New York studios of the corporation. The story, "The Net," is an adaptation of the famous work of Maravene Thompson. Olga Linek Scholl wrote the scenario. A notable cast has been selected for the picture. Heading it are Barbara Castleton, Raymond Bloomer and Albert Roscoe. The others are Peggy Davis, Arthur Gordoni, Cornelius F. Keefe, Helen Tracy, Eliah Nadel, Alexander Gaden, Guy Combs Byron Douglas, Claire De Lores, and Eileen Grout.

Here and There

Popular Pictures have completed "Robin Hood Jr.," featuring Frankie Lee, under the direction of Clarence Bricker. The Fatty Karr comedy "Long Skirts" directed by Bruce Mitchell is also finished.

Ben Wilson is completing "The Devil's Door Yard," starring William Fairbanks, and is casting a new comedy featuring Monte Banks.

The Jackie Coogan Company gave a Charity Circus for the benefit of the Far East Relief Fund, Saturday, and realized about ten thousand dollars for the fund as well as making the circus scenes for "Toby Tyler."

The Halperin Production, "Tea With a Kick," is being filmed at the Fine Arts studio from a continuity by Harvey Thew.

"The Great Menace" has been completed by Albert Rogell and plans are being made for filming of "Why Do We Live?"

Regal Pictures, Inc., organized by Clark Thomas, former general manager of Ince studios, to make a series of pictures for Associated Exhibitors, is beginning work on "The Tinsel Harvest." This will be directed by William Seiter, starring Madge Bellamy, and is an adaptation from a story by Harold Thumae, with a continuity by Del Andrews. Jack Mulhall will play the lead.

John Griffith Wray is at Yuma, with his company, where Bradley King's story "News," is being filmed.

Leah Baird is now filming "The Destroying Angel," most pretentious subject of a series, which requires big interiors and specially selected exteriors. W. S. Van Dyke is directing. Among the principals are John Bowers, Ford Sterling and Noah Beery.

Mrs. Florence Strauss, formerly with Famous Players and Goldwyn, has recently joined the force of Associated First National and is now scenario editor of that organization.

Cullen Landis has been engaged by Vitagraph to create the role of Dick Halpin in its forthcoming special production, "Masters of Men."

Word was received this week from the Coast that Principal Pictures Corporation had started production in the Principal studios in Los Angeles on a new version of Harold Bell Wright's famous story, "The Re-Creation of Bryant Kent." This picture will be ready for release late in January or early in February.

Rose Coghlan, noted actress, has completed her film engagement in the "Secrets of Paris."

On completion of "Money, Love and the Woman," John M. Stahl will produce "Daughters of the Rich," an original story by Irene Frances Reels.

Ruth Roland, is at present working on "Ruth's Millions," in fifteen episodes. This is being produced at the United Studios, Los Angeles. Her director is George Marshall who also directed "Ruth of the Rockies."

Vincent Coleman, one of the screen's busiest leading men, is at it again this week. He is playing a prominent role in Daniel Carson Goodman's production, "Something for Nothing," which is being filmed at the Tilford Studios, New York City.

Ferdinand Pinney Earle will direct Theda Bara in "The Easiest Way."

Frank Lloyd who is directing "Within the Law," a Joseph Schenck production in which Norma Talmadge will star, is taking no chances with his cast of characters. One of the principal reasons for his trip from the coast to New York was to get the best players possible. While in New York he signed De Witt Jennings for the part of Inspector Burke, a part Jennings played in the stage version. He also signed Tom Ricketts for the role of General Hastings, a small part in the play that is being made an important one in the picture.

Katherine MacDonald's next picture for First National release will be "Refuge." The supporting cast as announced by B. B. Schulberg will include Hugh Thompson, Fred Malafesta, Arthur Edmund Carewe, Grace Morse and Eric Mayne. Victor Schertzinger will direct.

Home in Hollywood from a lengthy visit to her mother in Paris, Andree Peyre, Pathe player and aviatrix, is awaiting the arrival of a new biplane which, according to word received today, has been shipped from New York. The plane was designed especially for her own use by Mlle. Peyre who supervised its construction while in France.

Having completed cutting and titling his production of Tarkington's Pulitzer prize novel, "Alice Adams," starring Florence Vidor, Roland V. Lee, in association with George Barnes, the cinematographer, is carefully watching its progress through the laboratories so that it will reach the public as nearly perfect as possible. Completed prints will be shipped East shortly. The release date as yet has not been decided on.

Thomas G. Patten, former postmaster of the City of New York, now representing the Will H. Hays organization in the motion picture industry in Los Angeles, made his first official appearance before the heads of the big film companies on the Pacific Coast Friday evening, December 8th, at a dinner given in his honor at the Hotel Ambassador, Los Angeles, by Myron Selznick and A. G. Volck, respectively president and vice-president of Selznick Pictures Corporation. Practically every big motion picture enterprise in the country was prominently represented.

George D. Baker, among the best known of contemporary authors, directors, and scenarists, has been employed by David O. Selznick to provide the script from which Ferdinand Earle will work in filming "The Easiest Way." Mr. Earle is already busy with his plans for the production and Mr. Baker has his story well in hand. The actual work of "shooting" will be begun the first week in January in the East.

Friends of Victor Heerman is head heels in the job of directing the forthcoming Selznick master production, Sir Anthony Hope's "Rupert of Hentzau." Mr. Heerman is working from a script provided by Edward J. Montagne—a script which he has had a definite hand in making. His cast includes Elaine Hammerstein, Bert Lytell, Lew Cody, Claire Windsor, Bryant Washburn, Hobart Bosworth, Mitchell Lewis, Irving Cummings, Marjorie Daw, Elmo Lincoln, Adolphe Jean Menjou, Nigel De Brullier, Gertrude Astor and Josephine Crowell.

More scenes from Constantinople picturing important developments in the Near East have been received by Selznick News from E. B. Schoedsack and are included in Selznick News Number 1,100. The cameraman was in Constantinople when Abdul Medjid, chosen by the Kemalist Government to replace the Sultan of Turkey as ruler of the Moslems, ascended the ancient throne of the Mahomets. Although the ceremony which placed a new ruler in control of the Turkish Governmentwas not a coronation, considerable solemnity surrounded the proceedings.

A Real Christmas

CHRISTMAS means much to us this year. Twelve months ago THE STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES were an unfinished dream of something the industry needed. Today they stand out as the finest plant of the kind. Twelve months ago an empty, incompleted building stood where today the foremost producers of the West are getting a new conception of laboratory service and cooperation. It has been a year of hard work, of unavoidable difficulties, but a year crammed with achievements of which we are justly proud.

WE have given some of the industry's biggest producers daily service they never believed possible. We have removed the laboratory problem from pictures. We have demonstrated that our release prints look better and wear longer. Many of the year's best pictures have gone through THE STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES from the camera to the screen. We hope each succeeding Christmas will mark for us a year of corresponding expansion and achievement and of greater prosperity for the entire industry.

Why I Show Paramount Pictures

By G. A. Rea, Manager

THE COLONIAL

Washington C. H., Ohio

PARAMOUNT has one Home Office that I know of that remembers the small town exhibitor, and Paramount is one company that I know of that remembers a small town exhibitor after he signs on the dotted line.

When I sold out at Hillsboro last July, Paramount was the only company to express regret, and here's a line that came from the Home Office that I will always remember—"Be assured of PARAMOUNT'S well wishes wherever you go."

I struck it lucky here. I was able to secure 22 of the 41, and believe me they are 22 without an Alibi. Here's a few of the knockouts I have played—"Blood and Sand," "Manslaughter," "On the High Seas," "Valley of Silent Men," "Gilded Cage" and proud to announce "The Young Rajah" for my Thanksgiving attraction and "The Old Homestead" Christmas week ALL WEEK. Oh Boy! what pictures they are.

It's a great pleasure to exhibit a PARAMOUNT Picture. You know they are half sold before you begin. Any Paramount Picture is easier to sell than most any other SPECIAL and when you make a noise about a Paramount Special—Oh boy! how easy it is.

How I want the next 39! If I get PARAMOUNT just watch my dust. Anyhow I am sure saving a date book full of open time and HOPING.

Your latest production, "The Pride of Palomar" which has just completed a week at my Capitol Theatre has occasioned so very many enthusiastic comments that I am forced to take out the good picture set into the Madison for week of December 17th and insist that you let me play this production another week at my Madison Theatre. This is only the second time in the history of my theatres that I have done this. "The Pride of Palomar" is undoubtedly one of the best productions of the year.

U. S. BONDED WAREHOUSE

If your office is in New York your films stored in our vaults gives you the assurance of having your valuable motion picture negatives and positives in the very safest place in the world. Storing with us also relieves you of all the petty details of the physical handling of hazardous materials and the consequent annoyance of stringent fire department requirements, so odious to the busy executive.

If you are located abroad or out of town the storage of your motion picture films in our approved fire-proof vaults at a nominal monthly storage charge gives you a service for which a special representative would probably charge you an amount equal in just one week to what you would pay us in a whole year.

A customer's interests are ours. We accept no commissions and pay none. For handling for a customer all of the details of a transaction that in commissions to an agent or a broker would cost the customer hundreds and perhaps thousands of dollars our charge would be only a few dollars for storage, projection and delivery services.

Our slogan—"Nothing too big for us to undertake. Nothing too small for us to do in a big way"—applies particularly to the very great variety of services which we are constantly rendering to our satisfied customers in all parts of the world.

Our warehouse is bonded. Have your incoming foreign shipments consigned in our care and you will then be able to examine them just around the corner from your office. You will also be able to project in bond sample prints of foreign subjects and to return them without the payment of duty. The use of our bonded trucks will also result in a very great saving to you.

Send your films to our warehouse. Write us a letter telling us to whom to show them or just what to do with them. Your patronage will be greatly appreciated and your instructions will be carried out in a manner that will be absolutely to your satisfaction. We will show your pictures to any one or all of the buyers of American and foreign rights and will execute any kind of an agreement you may require. To all of these services you are entitled as a customer of

"One Exciting Night,"

The first genuinely up-to-date mystery picture ever filmed. Brimful of love, laughter and thrills. A frantic search for a missing half million dollars. Stealthy figures and peering eyes. Sliding panels and secret doors. The funniest black-face comedian possible. And a tremendous storm scene as a gorgeous, dynamic climax.

"Orphans of the Storm,"

A Griffith picturization of the famous "The Two Orphans" as the basis for a historically accurate presentation of the titanic upheavals of the French revolution. The sweetest love story of all history. Scenes of pagan splendor among the aristocrats as the rabble riots for bread. The "great ride" as a Griffith climax.

"Way Down East,"

Foremost among the most popular pictures D. W. Griffith ever made. Melodrama and romance; comedy and adventure; box-office certainty everywhere every time. A cast beyond criticism or comparison. A picture for the small town theatre as well as the big city. And there's the Griffith thriller in the form of a smashing ice scene.

"Dream Street,"

A truly Griffith feature in every sense of the word, picturing the famous Limehouse district of London. A tenderly beautiful love story for the romantically inclined, plus mystery and melodrama as only Griffith himself transfers to the screen. The great director is at his best in this picture of beauty in the midst of squalor.

"The Love Flower,"

A D. W. Griffith triumph from all phases of picture-making. A wonderful story that runs the gamut of all the human emotions—love, hate, revenge, forgiveness. Superb settings on a tropical isle, with marvellous photography showing a battle to the death deep, deep, in the water at the foot of a towering cliff. A real thriller.

"Broken Blossoms."

The most artistically beautiful picture this master producer ever filmed, with real entertainment for all classes. Not a "high-brow" picture, but a tremendous melodrama of the London Limehouse district, with a love story so tenderly told as to bring tears—tears that wash away sadness and make beauty seem more beautiful.

"The White Rose,"

Now in course of production.

Seasons Greetings
Johnny Hines.

THIS should be the season of greatest rejoicing for our art-industry. For it is the climax of a year of substantial progress—a year of constructive development toward stabilized conditions and higher ideals.

Better showmanship in our theatres and better pictures from our studios have been the two great contributing factors to this progress. Realization on the part of the producer of the demand for more sincere creative effort and for real entertainment, coupled with splendid presentation and constructive exploitation, have reestablished public confidence in motion pictures with consequent reaction at the box-office.

This season has brought the greatest array in big pictures in the industry's history—and the producing schedule for 1923 indicates that the high standards of 1922 will be excelled.

I offer as my contribution to the continued prosperity of the theatres, "The Hottentot," now in release through Associated First National Pictures Inc. with every assurance that it will prove the greatest comedy-drama of the season, with "Bellboy 13" and "What a Wife Learned!" for release in January and February. "Scars of Jealousy," "A Man of Action" and "The Sunshine Trail" will follow in the spring.

My dear Mr. Ripley,

Good work commands attention. Excellent work, continuously, deserves merit and receives it in quantities. Therefore, it gives me pleasure to be in a position to state, that the work you have been turning out for me, since I have been with the Cosmopolitan Productions, (Photographing Miss. Davies) has been of the highest type, and certainly the best turned out for me in the East. I am a Californian and naturally favor the native sons. When I came East I was somewhat skeptical with regard to the sort of film developing, but thanks to your very excellent work, nothing is left wanting in that respect. Need any more be said?

In closing, kindly accept my thanks for your kind co-ordination with me.

Sincerely yours,

ELINOR GLYN'S

THE MAN AND THE MOMENT

FROM THE ASTOUNDING NOVEL BY ELINOR GLYN

Announce ELINOR GLYN and you express the intriguing, romantic appeal which accounts for the tremendous circulation of her novels.

"The Man and the Moment" is the latest to reach the screen. It is a typical ELINOR GLYN attraction. Imagine a plot in which a man and a girl—absolute strangers—meet and agree to marry at once and then separate. The moment comes; their marriage is but the beginning of a strange romance.

The Moving Picture World hits the heart of the story in saying, "The feature is devoted to youth and youth's reaction to a more or less transitory love. A moment's fancy becomes a sincere affection that grows with time and separation."

The Exhibitors Trade Review declares, "The picture possesses artistic charm . . . and the director has skilfully avoided anything offensive."

The Morning Telegraph says, "It is up to the standard of program features. In fact, a little better."

A love story of absorbing romantic interest, coupled with the magic name of Elinor Glyn, makes it a production which exhibitors know will get the money.

Constance Binney in

A BILL OF DIVORCEMENT

(NATIONALLY ADVERTISED)

EVERY prediction has been fulfilled. Constance Binney in "A Bill of Divorcement" is superb entertainment.

In dramatic strength it even exceeds the power of the stage play which amazed New York, startled London and in Chicago is now living up to its reputation as one of the biggest hits of 1921-1922.

Joe Dannenberg of Film Daily saw the feature and wrote "A fine picture—one that is going to start them talking because of the wallop it contains. For sheer dramatic entertainment it can hardly be surpassed."

The National Board of Review (Exceptional Photoplays, November, 1922) declares, "It has an essential merit deserving of wide appreciation."

Constance Binney's work is simply amazing. Her exquisite beauty lends an appealing background to her poignant interpretation of a daughter who sacrifices her own future for the happiness of a divorced mother and the salvation of a lonely father

Fay Compton, Malcolm Keen, Henry Victor and others complete "an exceptionally capable and well suited cast and all credit is due Denison Clift, who made the picture," to again quote Film Daily.

Associated Exhibitors proudly proclaims Constance Binney in "A Bill of Divorcement," combining the name of an alluring star with the fame of a great stage play, as an emotionally perfect photoplay and a genuine first run attraction.

THIS is the first of a series of six advertisements to appear weekly in THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, written by Ellis Parker Butler, world famous humorist and author of "Pigs is Pigs," telling America about a new screen play, "East is West." Mr. Butler accepted this commission only on condition that he be permitted to say exactly what he pleased on the subject.
Ellis Parker Butler
Why shouldn't I tell the world about "East is West" if I want to?
Thousands and thousands of people have already laughed and wept over the adventures of little Ming Toy "99% American girl" and her athletic lover Billy Benson in the stage play "East is West." Everybody that saw Fay Bainter, as the first Ming Toy, being hustled down to the gorgeous but hideous Love Boat because her "father" thought too many daughters were a curse unless he could cash in on their beauty in the matrimonial slave market, will admit it was a great play. Since its first night on Broadway the play has had a two-year run at the Astor, played many consecutive weeks the sixth time it returned to San Francisco, and is still a success on the road. Nearly every American willing to pay two dollars or up for a seat has seen it, and it has made a fortune for its authors, Samuel Shipman and John B. Hymer, and for Wm. Harris, Jr., its producer. And they deserve it for providing so much good fun to a world that needs all it can get. Of course, the Motion Picture people were quick to ask for the screen rights of such a hit but the authors and producers knew its value and let the movie men bid against bid for two long years before they cried "SOLD" to Constance Talmadge's Manager, Joseph M. Schenk.
Now, I haven't the least bit of diffidence in saying I am being paid for writing this series of articles, which will run for six weeks in The Saturday Evening Post. I don't think it will hurt my standing as an author. Magazines and newspapers pay authors to write about the stage and screen, and all I am asked to do is to tell the truth about "East is West" as I see it. Honestly, I think it is going to be fun to be able to tell some ten million people what I think about a motion picture play. So here goes—more about "East is West" next week.

The meeting of Ming Toy and Billy Benson
/hat does "East is West" mean?
When it comes to a matter of love and bate, good and evil, 'est is East, and East is West. And that's true. To prove it : story takes an altogether delicious little China maid, who n't feel China," and puts her in danger of the hideous things : can happen to a Chinese girl whose father sells her as a e. In the picture this little Ming Toy, who later boasts she 9% American-girl," is Constance Talmadge, and all through picture she seemed to me just about the most charming l have ever seen on the screen.
he story begins in China with little Ming Toy flashing most un-Chinese and thoroughly American bit of temper hoeshop because the shoe merchant dares hint that her e too large for beauty. By the time she has said her say her tongue and her paper umbrella the street before the looks as if China had just had a bad spell of riot and ebellion. This, naturally enough, attracts the attention Benson who happens to be "seeing China." Billy is an young American, son of the American Minister, and as Toy has about forty-seven parcels to manage, as well as little sisters and her temper, Billy sends them all home haws" or whatever the things are called in China. That e meets Ming Toy and is all he sees of her just then, re in mysterious China and know some thrilling thing to happen. And it does.

The Famous Love-Boat Auction Scene in "East is West"
"She is Ming Toy—The Beauteous One—and her price is most reasonable, your Excellency."
The "Love-Boat" scene in this "East is West" motion picture is a flash of real drama, and for two reasons. The first is the eye reason. By the time the love-boat appears we have een enough of China to feel that we are actually there, but it is he mean China of cheap streets and small shops and one-horse oolie-peasant farms. Then, suddenly, we are whisked down to us beautiful and gorgeous Chinese love-boat, as bright and owy as the gayest New York cabaret. That is a clever use scenic contrast.
But the scenic contrast would be paltry if the reason for it e not inevitable. By the time the love-boat appears we are ghtly interested in what is going to happen to the charming le Ming Toy (Constance Talmadge) and are worried about If Ming Toy were an ordinary Chinese girl, brought up to sider being sold at auction a possible fate, we might not care h, but Ming Toy "don't feel China" and does feel "99% erican-girl," and we do care. We hate like sin to see her eyed wretch of a father dress her up for sale and drag her to the love-boat, which is a sort of all-night Chinese et with a slave auction annex. We hate the fat mandarin looks her over as if she were mere live stock before he bids r, and we would like to give him a punch in the eye. So, e, the love-boat scene was inevitable. It had to be there. a part of Ming Toy's life story. And, just as Wellington terloo prayed for "night or Blücher," we want to know uch more of this Ming Toy has to stand, and why that ur young American lad, Billy Benson, doesn't get busy. tell you more next week.)

"I speak only dignified American language; get me, Stev

Seeing this "East is West" motion picture has increased m interest in the screen just about 99%. By nature and professi I am a humorist and I have sometimes felt that no humor b pie-slinging humor could be put on the screen successfully. T "East is West" picture satisfies me that any humor can filmed. Given the right treatment, humor can be as laughable the screen as on the stage or in a book I see that now.

"East is West" is the story of an averted tragedy but it humor from start to finish. Not a pie is slung and yet laughs are innumerable! Ming Toy (Constance Talma causes many of these by the entirely legitimate means of t a charmingly innocent little Chinese maiden who pick astonishing slum manners under the impression that they a manners of "99% American-girl," and shows she is pro them—as when she greets Charlie Yong haughtily wi speak only dignified American language; get me, Steve?" To my notion the meanest thing a man can do is to g away the plot of a play. I never do it. I have not done it this series of "East is West" advertisements. All I have is that Ming Toy, the little "Chinese" maid who "don't China," meets an athletic young American (Billy Benson) is then hurried to a love-boat to be sold into matrim slavery. That happens in China and presently little Ming is in San Francisco. I have not said how she gets there, or But in San Francisco a new villain pops up—the 50-50 C man Charlie Yong, who is going to get Ming Toy if he l steal her and murder everyone else.

That does create a situation! Charlie Yong is the f corseted chop suey king of San Francisco, and he usual what he wants. "She—Ming Toy—belong to Charlie Yong—" "Not if I know it," says Billy Benson

This is the last of the six advertisements I was to write about "East is West," and it has been good fun to talk to ten million people, writing what I pleased, and getting paid for it. I think I have done pretty well as an advertisement writer and I'm going to be disappointed if at least ten million do not go to see "East is West" because of these advertisements. My whole family will go—and we are seven—so there are only 9,999,993 to be accounted for.

And now for my grand finale and bow. Before I agreed to write these advertisements I went to see "East is West." If I had not thought it was a good picture I would not have agreed to write anything I did like the picture. I only remember one picture I liked better—and I wrote that one myself. "East is West" has drama, thrill, fun and pathos and some of the best acting ever photographed. Constance Talmadge as Ming Toy reveals shades of emotion—from broad fun to appealing pathos—such as she has never shown before. Her Ming Toy will be one of the best loved characters on the screen, or I miss my guess. If I am not mightily mistaken "East is West" is going to be a tremendous success. That's what I think. I wish every one of my 9,999,993 readers who see the picture could tell me whether they think as I think—the other seven will. What I think is that it is a delightful motion picture and I do not hesitate to urge you to see it at the first opportunity. You'll thank me.

And I thank you!

Our Holiday Number Feature

WE give herewith a "Hall of Fame" and an "honor roll" of the notables in the art and industry of the motion picture.

The selections were made by ninety-six persons, a jury, so-called, of prominent and experienced individuals within and outside of motion picture circles and well divided as to callings.

A few of the jury begged off with the plea that the matter required more thought and time than circumstances happened to allow them at present; it has been evident to us, in each instance, that those who sent in their lists made them up with a great deal of serious and painstaking thought and purpose. We take this occasion to thank each of the jury for their great interest in the matter.

An analysis of the selections, from our standpoint, may be of moment.

The names of Griffith, Zukor and Rothapfel appeared on nearly every list. Evidently they were thought of with almost conventional regularity and not only as leaders in their prospective fields, but also as outstanding figures in a general way.

In somewhat the same manner Mary Pickford, Chaplin and Fairbanks are listed as the screen's eminent stars. Harold Lloyd has some staunch supporters however, which indicates very clearly that he will stand high in near future counts.

George Eastman looms for his fundamental and miportant position in the industry.

Thomas A. Edison stands forth for his inventions, though there are thoughtful and pronounced reasons given for the listing of such other technical pioneers as E. S. Porter, Nicholas Power, C. Francis Jenkins, Hannibal Goodwin, Edward Muybridge, Latham and others.

The vote is close, for places among the twelve, between J. D. Williams, Will H. Hays, Carl Laemmle, Jesse L. Lasky, Cecil De Mille, W. W. Hodkinson, Charles Pathe, and Harold Lloyd.

Practically every juror, in submitting a list, wrote substantially; "you have put forth a hard job to me; I've thought and thought hard and this is the best I can do."

It is a hard job, we know; and we feel that the arbitrary number of twelve prevented many another worthy selection. Most jurors felt inclined to recognize each branch of the art and industry, so far as possible and this scheme of course, kept subdued of necessity, names that are admittedly prominent from a general standpoint.

Greater prominence, too, was given to the present era of the motion picture and the industry. A very good treatise could be written on this era, just back of us and still with us and such of its shaping and contributing forces as J. J. Kennedy, George Kleine, William Fox, Carl Laemmle, Albert E. Smith, J. Stuart Blackton, E. S. Porter, Frank L. Dyer, Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, The Warners, Charles Urban, Harry Raver, George K. Spoor, W. N. Selig, Charles J. Hite, Daniel Frohman, P. L. Waters and many others.

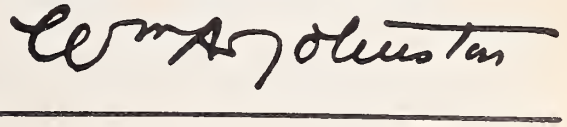
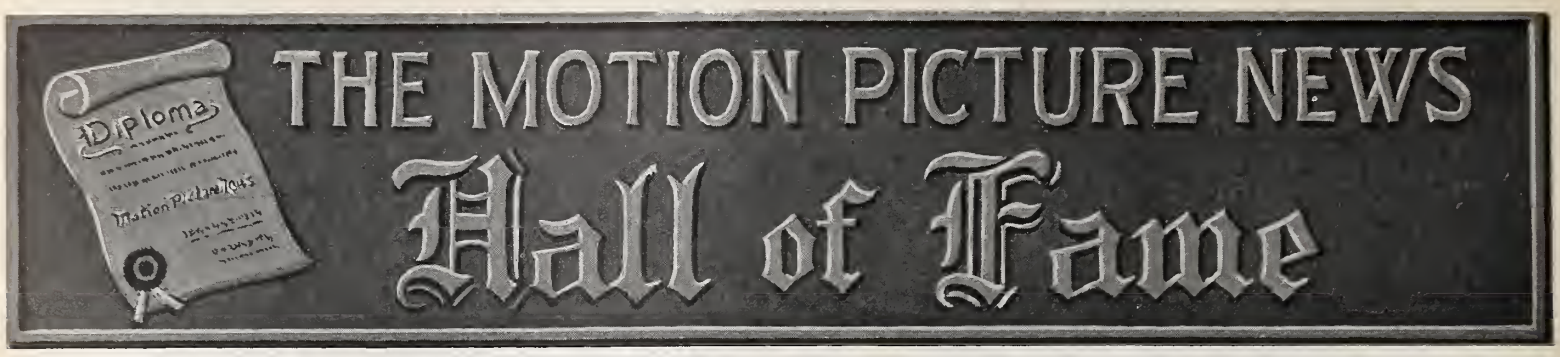
We are only in another era today, and there are great developments with us that have not as yet reached a commanding position. It is noticeable, for instance, that the list of twelve contains no authors, nor do any arrive near the list. Yet what other factor today than the story and its continuity is of greater importance to the better motion picture?

There is this to say, however; the jurors represent a wide variety of viewpoints; their expressions of opinion are sincere, in many an instance the reason back of a single vote is quite enough to give a crown of credit to worthy and constructive effort.

Here are our standards and standard bearers as a group of people now see them; the clear indication of the good things we are accomplishing and aiming at, the higher purposes of this art and this industry.





AT the invitation of Motion Picture News, one hundred people, good men and true, have constituted themselves into a jury to select by their collective vote, conscientiously and with all seriousness of purpose, the twelve greatest people of the motion picture industry.

Each juror has made an individual choice of twelve persons and appended to each name, briefly, his reasons for the selection.

The twelve persons appearing the greatest number of times on each of the individual lists of twelve forthcoming from each juror have been thus automatically elected to this, our Hall of Fame. The whole process has been one of plurality vote, with no substitutions or restrictions.

Motion Picture News in empanelling its jury gave careful thought and individual attention to the important problem of obtaining the services of persons of undoubted capability in the matter of making fair and impartial selections and to balance the individual jurors among various professions and walks of life, to the end that the result accruing should be unqualifiedly representative and of sufficient scope so that no likely candidate would be overlooked.

In presenting this Hall of Fame it has been actuated by a greater purpose than merely to provide an interesting feature for an annual Christmas edition. It has sought to single out the greatest of our many great—the men and women who have done the most to bring not only prosperity and popularity to the industry, but who have and in most cases still are laboring faithfully and intelligently toward a better code of ethics, a greater usefulness in the world and higher ideals; those who have been constructive, high minded and intelligently artistic.

It is with pride and pleasure that Motion Picture News presents its 1922 Hall of Fame.

D. W. GRIFFITH

Veteran Producer and Director Who Wins First Place in Hall of Fame

IT is not unusual, in viewing the history of David Wark Griffith, to find record of many honors freely bestowed and great tribute honestly paid. Since the days of Biograph, his directorial genius, his vision, his independence of viewpoint and his ideals, as well as the pictures he has produced, have been the subject of unqualified praise, by those who are themselves great.

It naturally followed, that when candidates for Motion Picture News' Hall of Fame were viewed in perspective, that Mr. Griffith's name should be accepted as one of the twelve, but that he would be so universally a choice, seemed beyond the possibility of human achievement.

The greater the man, usually, the more cordially he is hated by those who hate at all. Even such immortal Americans as Washington, Lincoln and Roosevelt, find, though they be gone from this earth, critics who acknowledge little that was good of them and much of which they did not approve.

But not so David Wark Griffith, if we are to accept the jury empaneled to select our twelve greatest people as a criterion of what a jury is supposed to represent, a competent opinion uninfluenced by prejudice or malice and in possession of all of the facts in the case.

Only 89 of the jury of 96 have failed to include Mr. Griffith in their list of twelve. That is a vote of such overwhelming proportion as to be practically unanimous and certainly is a tribute that even one accustomed to great honors can not fail to appreciate.

The jury selected, has taken its task seriously; how seriously may be learned by quoting from the letter which accompanied the list of Juror James R. Quirk, editor of Photoplay.

Mr. Quirk said in part:

"I have never seen a subject on which there was more difference of opinion than on the twelve best that you are trying to get together.

"I called our whole editorial staff together, and even among these hard shelled critics it was no easy matter to come to a decision. It is one thing to pick the stars and the most popular people in pictures today and it is another thing to follow back through the years since the motion picture started and give credit to those great influences that are responsible for what it is today."

And Mr. Quirk was one of the jury to cast his vote for Mr. Griffith, and following is the "reason" he appended:

"Because as a director he took the motion picture seriously and foresaw something of the real power of the screen, because he dared to bet anybody's money he could get that he was right, because he was among the first to see the screen for effects of realism."

Juror Don Allen was another to comment by letter on the list he presented. Mr. Allen wrote: "My list, may, to some, sound frivolous. (There is a bit of humor in some of Mr. Allen's 'reasons'), but to me it is a serious matter and I have in the main, treated it as such."

When Mr. Allen commented on his selection of Mr. Griffith, here is what he wrote: "David Wark Griffith is selected because, I think, he puts a little section of his heart o' hearts and a tiny drop of his life's blood in his big scenes."

Others who gave reasons of unusual import are quoted as follows:

Tarkington Baker: "For courageous independence and bold pioneering and successful exploitation of the vast realms of directorial possibilities and opportunities whereby new stands were established."

Charles H. Christie: "I name D. W. Griffith, whose 'Birth of a Nation' so brilliantly paved the way for motion picture production, and who has followed in his own footsteps almost invariably with special attractions."

Jesse Lasky: "Establisher of the first well defined school of direction."

Rex Beach: "Because he is responsible for much of the modern photoplay technique and is the greatest director the industry has produced."

Harold B. Franklin: "Because of his achievements as a director and because he has ever been a guide to others in his profession."

A. S. Friend: "For his contribution of artistic effort, which proved that the limits of size and time could be nullified by the bringing into the art of thought and power of expression."

W. W. Hodkinson: "As the pioneer American director of intelligence and imagination. The Biograph products directed by him became a standard of excellence when American producers began to develop in a crude way. His later achievements are too well known to be commented on."

Harry Crandall: "I choose D. W. Griffith, whose creative efforts and genius in the production of pictures have done much to advance the business, and to secure public recognition and appreciation of the merit of motion pictures."

P. A. Parsons: "Because he first proved that the motion picture could be entertainment for the classes as well as the masses. Because he has elevated motion pictures and in so doing has elevated the motion picture business."

Joseph Dannenberg: "Who, years ago, in producing 'The Birth of a Nation,' created an art under tremendous nerve-racking difficulties and who, today, is yet 'The Master.'"

E. K. Gillett: "The greatest creative and directorial genius in the industry."

Morris Kohn: "For the masterpieces he has created."

Edward McManus: "For creative directing."

Nat B. Rothstein: "I choose Mr. Griffith for his fearlessness in selecting stories that demand costumes in spite of the ever-living fear of exhibitors for costume plays. Mr. Griffith has stepped out and despite exhibitors' objections, has produced pictures not only that stand as a monument for art, but that have tremendous box-office values. I believe that through Mr. Griffith's fearlessness and ability he has set the pace for other producers to follow in the selection of his plays and the quality of his productions."

ADOLPH ZUKOR

President of Famous Players Lasky Is Second in Hall of Fame Vote

"JUST BECAUSE," says W. R. Rothacker in qualifying his selection of Adolph Zukor in the Hall of Fame.

"Because he creates," writes William A. Brady.

"Centralized finance and business," adds George Irving.

"Vision and imagination," comments C. C. Burr.

"Organization and stabilization of production," relates C. L. Yearsley.

"Because he sees ahead," states Robert E. Sherwood.

"An organizer of exceptional ability," continues J. D. Williams.

"Greatest organization mind in the industry," affirms E. K. Gillett.

And so on down a list of the 96 jurors, composed of producers, exhibitors and other people connected with the industry, some who might with all honesty of purpose be envious of the president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and prone to belittle his monumental achievements.

Seventy-two votes of a possible 96 is a remarkable tribute in any event. For a man in Mr. Zukor's position, to be so unanimously chosen is a double victory.

It will be noted that the above quotations are the essence of brevity. It would almost seem as if these jurors, in commenting on their selection, had unconsciously gauged their comments to fit the personality of this quiet, unassuming business man, who came into the motion picture industry when it was hardest for the outsider to gain a foothold (General Film Company days).

The history of Adolph Zukor in motion pictures, of his organization of Famous Players and later of reorganizations that were effected until the present great production, distribution and theatre owning firm became a reality, is familiar to every person who will read this article.

Little can be said that will not appear commonplace, placed in comparison with the words of the Hall of Fame jury, who by their collective votes and their notations appended, pay a greater honor than it is the fortune of most people to achieve.

We quote further from these jurors, allowing them to tell a story full of romance, and drama, enacted by a star of first magnitude, who for all his success, is still unspoiled by the plaudits of a other great men.

George J. Schade: "On account of his octopus activities. He brought numerous independent producers into existence."

Rowland Rogers: "For his executive ability in organizing the production, distribution and exhibition of pictures on a large scale, and producing a high type of entertainment of high standard."

Jesse D. Hampton: "Because his vision and ability has placed him in the commanding position in the industry."

C. E. Whitaker: "Because he took pictures away from the Nickelodeon class."

H. B. Franklin: "Whose vision and tireless efforts have placed the motion picture industry on the great plane of other legitimate businesses. It is primarily through his efforts that the biggest banking interests have recognized the motion picture as one of the most impotrant industries in the world."

Peter J. Brady: "For having the vision to foresee the possibilities in five-reel productions."

Harry Crandall: "Adolph Zukor, who was the first man to attract legitimate stars to the screen, thereby affording an opportunity to the exhibitors to lift the industry from the cheap 'store show' class."

W. W. Hodkinson: "For his belief that the popularity of stage stars could be transferred to the screen to assist it in its progress toward better things."

A. G. Stolte: "To Adolph Zukor must go first honors for the rapid development that he has given the motion picture industry. His foresight has placed the motion pictures where they stand today."

E. R. Rogers: "A dynamic force reflected in a matchless organization which attains perfection in production, exhibitor, exploitation and distribution. The industry's pace-maker."

James Quirk: "Because he combines to an unparalleled degree the elements of art instinct, business judgment, imagination, vision and ruthlessness and subtle craft, to dominate an unruly, still undisciplined business. Because he knows good proletarian art and dares to experiment in trying to get it, because his work evidences the sound conviction that the best service reaps the greatest reward."

Charles H. Christie: "Adolph Zukor, whose guiding hand has so long built up a solid organization and whose foresight for stabilizing an industry was so particularly needed at the time he laid this foundation."

George C. Carpenter: "The man who first saw the possibilities of the modern photoplay production and who since that time has always kept several months ahead of the field."

L. L. Stewart: "Captain of industry, financial genius with a vision and sufficient enthusiasm to overcome obstacles and to organize a production and distributing corporation of sufficient magnitude to satisfy the demand for innumerable 'bigger and better photoplays' and to make them in connection with national advertising, commercially practical."

L. J. Selznick: "For his work in bringing fine authors and artists to appreciate the screen; and for building the finest organization in the history of the business."

Arthur S. Kane: "For developing the many-reel picture and combining famous plays and players."

Fred J. Beecroft: "His business foresight made possible the distribution of a program of big pictures and thru his financial genius has tended to keep the motion picture in good repute with the banking interests."

P. A. Parsons: "Because of his high ability as an organizer and executive."

Tarkington Baker: "For constructive organization that has materially assisted in the financial stabilization of the industry."

SAMUEL L. ROTHAFEL

This Veteran Exibitor Only One Chosen in His Field

BACK in 1917 the readers of Motion Picture News began hearing considerable concerning Samuel L. Rothafel, through the medium of a feature page sponsored by R. E. Pritchard, then director of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau, captioned "Seeing the Rialto and Rivoli with Roxie."

Mr. Rothafel had come from smaller cities to the Regent theatre, New York, with an idea.

In those days, for the most part, the picture theatre and picture theatre presentation was largely a mechanical problem. Good projection, good prints, well selected pictures—something with a punch and a thrill—a "flash," a reasonable amount of cleanliness inside, were the fundamentals of successfully conducting a "movie" show.

Some houses were larger than others, some were blessed with a better location, and some were better managed—within the limitations described above—but in the main the show was the same in every theatre: a feature, a comedy, maybe Pathe News or a split reel educational and scenic.

So far as Broadway was concerned Mr. Rothafel, first as managing director of the Regent, Mark Strand and later in the same capacity at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, had inaugurated something new. He had invented a way to give a picture show individuality—to make it different—to elevate it above the plane of the movie and place it on a level with its then more pretentious rival, the legitimate stage.

Mr. Rothafel's idea, as it does today, represented an intelligent amalgamation with certain fundamentals of the legitimate and operatic stage.

To the opera Mr. Rothafel went for better music and better musicians. He instituted an overture number and featured his orchestra throughout the whole bill, even to a special score for the feature picture and the shorter films.

From the drama he borrowed, for adaptation, scenery, lighting effects and other back stage paraphernalia.

It was all pioneer labor, and even as Rome was not built in a day, neither was this new form of divertissement sold to either the public or the trade in a few months.

But the photoplay impressario from the hinterland, with an idea for increasing the scope of picture theatres, persisted and progressed and through various mediums, notably "Seeing the Rialto and Rivoli with Roxie," the industry began to be impressed. And now, seven years later, there is hardly a theatre in the United States that does not make some attempt at presentation, and legion are those who have become adept in the new art, even as is Mr. Rothafel now at the New York Capitol.

This preamble to a story purporting to pertain to a member of the Hall of Fame seemed necessary since, to a very large extent, the jurors who have elected Mr. Rothafel to that place of eminence and honor have taken particular pains to point out their special reasons for so doing. Nearly every reason is to the effect that he was the first to give motion pictures better presentation, better music and to diversify the program.

Perhaps no greater tribute to Mr. Rothafel in this connection is that of Eugene H. Roth, himself an exhibitor of nation wide repute, who says in explanation of his selection: "This gentleman has, perhaps, done more for the industry from the artistic and progressive point of view than any member of our profession, for Mr. Rothafel has been first to conceive the importance and higher development of musical treatment in picture houses; was the primary developer of artistic prologues in the presentation of pictures; has devoted a great deal of personal time to traveling throughout the United States and meeting the exhibitors, giving freely of his ideas and a keener understanding of his aim and purpose, and he unquestionably is acknowledged throughout the world as the premier exhibitor. (Personally, I am a great admirer of Mr. Rothafel and acknowledge his superiority.)"

Others who have commented in a similar vein are:

J. D. Williams: "Originator of a class of entertainment that has elevated the business to a great extent. He is in a class by himself as an exhibitor, having done more towards the exhibition of pictures, from an artistic standpoint, than any other single individual."

Jesse D. Hampton: "Because, within a year, his presentation of pictures advanced the industry an entire decade."

J. H. Hallberg: "For being the first exhibitor to 'present' motion pictures and to appreciate and apply orchestra accompaniment and stage settings in conjunction with perfect projection in specially constructed magnificent photoplay theatres. His pioneer work more than ten years ago has set the pace for modern motion picture presentation."

J. R. Grainger: "Because his work at the Capitol Theatre proves that he knows best how to present motion pictures."

Reginald Warde: "The outstanding showman of the industry."

Arthur G. Stolte: "Because he synchronized motion pictures to music."

Frank Rembusch: "Whose presentation of motion pictures was a new epoch. By his wonderful foresight and artistic conception he so embellished the motion picture with musical, architectural and decorative arts, and brought the motion picture to a much higher plane. His synchronizing of musical forms, his screen stories and the use of lighting effects to give atmosphere is a notable achievement and his influence has been felt in every theatre."

Herschel Stuart: "The acme of motion picture presentation."

Theodore L. Hays: "Daring—original—artistic—accomplished in music—art—and presentment. To whom the development of music—as a factor—in motion picture entertainment is due. Creator of the photoplay entertainment de luxe. His accomplishments have inspired the industry to better things."

MARY PICKFORD

"America's Sweetheart" Is Only Woman in Hall of Fame

AMERICA'S SWEETHEART, the title bestowed upon Mary Pickford some seasons ago, has now become a household word. Hers is a personality which has endured and has been universally accepted because of her simplicity of charm and manner. Her popularity is not based upon an idol-worshipping public. When motion pictures were developing the photoplay, it was Mary Pickford who carried the torch which lighted the way for producers stumbling along in the dark in an effort to realize upon the immense possibilities of the starring system and its popular appeal.

Blessed with beauty and talent, she never attempted to make capital of them. Rather did she follow the dictates of her own heart, which guided her to be always conscientious and sincere—to keep faith with her public.

Mary Pickford's star is just as brilliant in the film firmament today as when she blossomed forth in the days of Biograph.

Her place is secure in Motion Picture News' Hall of Fame.

P. A. Parsons gives as his reason for selecting the star: "Because of a personality that won a large following for motion pictures at an early time when that following was badly needed; because she was the first big box-office attraction; because of a sweetness and an art that time has ripened and not diminished."

Others who give reasons for selecting the star are quoted as follows:

Bruce Bliven: "Because, by charming personality and intelligent selection and production of stories, she has been more responsible than any other individual in making motion pictures the chief reliance for entertainment of the average middle class American family."

C. Gardner Sullivan: "Because she is still the idol of the average American girl, and because her screen portrayals, particularly in the past, overcame considerable prejudice against pictures."

Lewis J. Selznick: "Because she is the greatest artist of the screen, maintaining throughout the years, with ever greater efforts, popularity hard earned and well won."

Sidney Garrett: "The motion picture star whose stories have set a standard for other stars to follow."

Rowland Rogers: "For her ability as an artist and her good sense in the production of pleasing and worth-while pictures."

C. L. Yearsley: "Whose histrionic ability (Mr. Yearsley couples her name with those of Chaplin and Norma Talmadge) and personalities have done so much to popularize motion picture entertainment."

Perley Poore Sheehan: "Because of everything she is."

J. H. Hallberg: "For her many clever and beautiful productions."

Harold B. Franklin: "Because she is still 'America's Sweetheart'."

Reginald Warde: "Acknowledged the world's screen sweetheart in every picture land."

A. G. Stolte: "I select her because of the fact that it is Miss Pickford's personality, her charming mannerisms that attracted the attention of the public and made them staunch movie fans."

Wm. M. Seabury: "Not only because of her charming accomplishments, but also because of her judgment in the selection and portrayal of characters which have justly made her reign supreme in the affection of world wide audiences."

Julian Johnson: "Because of her accomplishment in remaining, year after year, from the very beginning of pictures, the foremost and one of the most interesting actresses."

Jesse D. Hampton: "Because her great artistry has been an inspiration to both public and picture people."

Wiliam A. Brady: "Because she stands for something and is the child of the industry."

E. Kendall Gillett: "The star who did most for the general uplift of pictures and the greatest actress ever developed in the industry."

Tarkington Baker: "For maintenance of exacting high standards of screen art from every point of view and for consistently conscientious effort to give always and generously the best within her."

Joseph J. Dannenberg: "Whose sweetness and clean characterizations have brought delight into millions of homes and more millions of hearts."

Wm. Brandt: "One of the earliest idols of the screen, who has maintained her position because her productions are always clean. I think Mary is the smartest actress on the screen, with practically no ego in her make-up, and her followers are increasing all the time."

Arthur S. Kane: "For bringing the personality picture to its highest pitch."

Herschel Stuart: "An institution of that sweetness that all motion pictures should incorporate."

R. H. Cochrane: "Because she is Mary Pickford."

George E. Carpenter: "Who holds the world's record for keeping in the limelight of public approval for the greatest number of years."

W. W. Hodkinson: "Her influence has always been sane, fine and wholesome."

John D. Williams: "Because of her great devotion to the industry and creation of a character that stands for good, clean films."

Frederick Palmer: "Greatest actress."

Tom Moore: "Who, by her extraordinary ability, sweet personality, charm and grace, made more picture fans and held matchless drawing power against the field that may stand for all time."

Arthur Butler Graham: "Because of her sublime method of beautifying everyday life and everyday things."

L. L. Stewart: "Because she was one of the first stars, but still continues to shine. This little woman has consistently and continuously improved her talents, her art and her appeal."

CHARLES CHAPLIN

Selected by Fifty-five Members of the Hall of Fame Jury

THOSE who have good memories and catch the vaudeville bills more than occasionally will remember an English act called "A Night in an English Music Hall," starring an English comedian named Billy Reeves. Those who have still better memories may recall another Englishman in the English company named Charles Chaplin.

"A Night in an English Music Hall" played the big time—some—and some time that wasn't so big. In the process of covering the latter, the act went West—went West and never returned—which event or incident, since vaudeville acts that strand in the hinterland are too numerous to be labeled events, made possible many things, among which is that in about twelve years Charles Chaplin has become Charlie Chaplin, one of the twelve greatest persons in the motion picture industry and the best known man in the world.

The first contention is a matter of opinion of and voluntary expression by 55 of the jury empaneled by Motion Picture News, whose duties have been previously explained.

The last is a matter of common knowledge—something accepted as a fact—no arguments or excuses about it.

Had "A Night in an English Music Hall" gone South, or North, or back to Dear Ol' Lunnon, what a different story might have been written.

But genius and opportunity met in Los Angeles by chance and the world has been laughing ever since—not at, but with the king of screen comedians—not at baggy trousers, a cast off derby, a trick coat, a half grown crepe hair mustache and a limber cane—but with an artist so clever that his pictures never grow old.

It is great to be funny, but greater to be both funny and great. And Charlie Chaplin has been selected in the Hall of Fame not for the entertainment he has provided for our jury or the public, but for his part in the constructive welfare of the motion picture industry. The comments of the jurors make that point clear.

We quote from some of those who have selected him.

Jesse Lasky: "Dignifying comedy on the screen and making of it a true phase of art; demanding for it consideration and an appreciation of its true importance are reasons why Charles Chaplin is entitled to the appreciation of the industry as a whole."

Howard Deitz: "Because, despite the art critics, he is still a great moving picture performer."

Perley Poore Sheehan: "Who rocks the earth—from Hollywood."

Frederick Palmer: "Greatest single genius."

Bruce Bliven: "Charlie Chaplin. Because he is the first really great genius to express himself wholly on the screen. Thereby he has demonstrated its possibilities to the extent that a great advance in the use of its potentialities has been made at a single leap."

J. R. Grainger: "Because he is making the world merry and bringing credit to the industry."

William M. Seabury: "Charles Chaplin. Because he has brought in his later productions real artistry to the comedy screen."

W. Griffith Mitchell: "The inimitable comedian, who deserves a mark of credit for discovering that child genius Jackie Coogan."

H. C. Horater: "Because he doesn't make many comedies."

J. D. Williams: "Wonderful pantomime artist and greatest character of his kind the world has ever known."

L. L. Stewart: "A comedian, whose name to mention is enough said."

William Johnston: "For his sincere work in endeavoring to present on the screen a high order of dramatic ability."

James R. Quirk: "Because judged by all the scientific standards of genius, he is the one genius the motion picture has directly produced. Edison is a genius, of course, but motion pictures are not alone responsible for that distinction."

R. E. Pritchard: "An artist unsurpassed in screen comedy. The only comedian who can be counted upon no matter what the vehicle."

Sidney Garrett: "The creator of a new type of comedy, which has made the world laugh and which has brought a larger demand for comedies."

Arthur S. Friend: "Actor, for sliding through the mire of slapstick and custard pies to the clear, inspiring field of an histrionism still unequalled on the screen, and seldom equalled on the stage."

L. J. Selznick: "For making more motion picture 'fans' than any other twelve persons combined."

Jesse D. Hampton: "Because his art appeals to every age, class and condition in every corner of the Globe."

Arthur S. Kane: "For pure, unadulterated genius."

Julian Johnson: "Because he is unquestionably the screen's and perhaps the world's greatest actor."

Anthony Paul Kelly: "He has done more t advance the comedy of the screen and make it a real art which it is than any other man or woman in it. He is the symbol of laughter, and to him are due thanks for much of the screen's popularity."

Robert G. Vignola: "For winning millions of patrons to the films through his comedic genius."

Edward J. Montagne: "His patronage winning comedy classics have him in a high place."

E. W. Hammons: "In spending his own money to make "The Kid" and refusing to release a picture unless it was up to a standard, regardless of the amount of money required to produce that picture.

Chester Beecroft: "Who developed comedy to a consummate art and thereby popularized "the movies" in tremendous fashion.

Harley Knowles: "For bringing to the screen the greatest personality it has ever known."

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS

One of Three Stars Selected by the Hall of Fame Jurors

WHEN Doug Fairbanks bounded through space and became a star in the film firmament, no one paid much attention to him. The screen wasn't looking for new faces then as much as at the present time. Oh, yes, he had been a Broadway luminary and had followed the kerosene circuit up and down the land, but publicity concerning our entertainers hadn't become the big enterprise it is today.

So Doug Fairbanks leaped from stage to screen without causing much furore of excitement. We all sat up and rubbed our eyes in his old Triangle days, when he appeared in "The Lamb." He was trying even then to show cause why he should be popular. Doug was a new tyype—charged with vim and enthusiasm. His wasn't a purpose to follow the conventions. He would smash them by capitalizing pep and energy. His contemporaries were content to be just actors—at rest.

Doug needed a new type of story. And Anita Loos came forward to supply a novel type of characterization and plots which danced like quicksilver. Doug possessed such a vital personality that he would not be denied. He put pep into pictures and created a new era. He didn't take himself too seriously; he felt he was having a good time. Yet he was always sincere and earnest. If he hadn't been his name would have passed into the realm of oblivion long ago and "The Mark of Zorro," "The Three Musketeers," and "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" would never have been produced.

Doug Fairbanks is well qualified to become a member in Motion Picture News' Hall of Fame. After the storm and stress of his early start he is now appreciated as one of the screen's leading luminaries—a figure who never knows the meaning of the word QUIT.

The jurors have chosen wisely and well. They all crowd forward with their eulogies.

C. Gardner Sullivan: "Because his productions, backed by the utmost sincerity and with the clearly defined intention of lifting the motion picture to higher levels have accomplished that purpose. He deserves the thanks of the entire motion picture population who are interested in the welfare of pictures."

Julian Johnson: "Because he is the screen's most energetic and one of its most wholesome and admirable personalities."

George Ade: "Because his manly and heroic impersonations and magnificent productions have set a real standard for other stars."

John D. Williams: "Because of his great confidence in the industry, putting more of his own money into it than any other individual."

Perley Poore Sheehan: "Because of his splendid audacity, both as actor and producer."

M. H. Feld: "For his splendid production of 'The Three Musketeers' and 'Robin Hood'."

William Brandt: "Unquestionably one of the most sincere and ambitious actors on the screen. Doug thinks he owes a great duty to the screen and hopes to make greater pictures with each release. Will probably give up acting and devote his entire time to directing and producing."

Here is Jesse Lasky who selects Doug and here is his reason:

"For his courage in popularizing the costume picture and in the face of undoubted opposition, going to almost unlimited lengths to give the public brilliant screen productions, Douglas Fairbanks will always be recognized."

Charles Urban would have you understand that he has chosen him "because his imagination and talent have been largely instrumental in advancing photoplays to their present fine quality."

William A. Brady: "His pictures are clean and he always gives the best in him."

E. V. Durling: "For proving that a man can reach the heights in production by making clean pictures exclusively."

Peter J. Brady: "For his efforts to put motion pictures on a higher and more artistic plane."

Tarkington Baker: "For daring and brilliant independence and originality as an actor-producer who has boldly used his popularity to give his audiences progressively something always different and better."

Charles H. Christie: "Who has proven that an actor can also be a producer of pictures which are drawing in a new type of audience for screened works."

Sid Grauman: "He is our greatest film actor today and a keen business man as well and in 'Robin Hood' he has added an exquisite poem to the motion picture industry."

Bruce Bliven: "Because he has been the leader in producing a type of healthy, robust and yet not stupid films which are of absorbing interest to children of all ages, without being wearisome to adults."

Arthur S. Kane: "For vision, nerve and producing ability which created that sublime masterpiece, 'Robin Hood'."

Lewis J. Selznick: "For his 'Robin Hood'—and for abandoning an established and 'sure fire' type of product, and gambling instead on bigger things, through an unquestionably sincere desire to uplift the industry—and for his success in fulfilling these ambitions."

William Johnston: "For his expenditure of energy, effort and money to make each film better than the last."

William M. Seabury: "Because he has contributed substantially to the development of art in motion pictures."

Watterson R. Rothacker: "Because he is 'Robin Hood'."

Rowland Rogers: "For his executive ability in producing good pictures at a time when they are sorely needed, and his developing ability as a motion picture pantomimist."

Earl W. Hammons: "Because he had the courage to invest the amount of money he did in "Robin Hood."

GEORGE EASTMAN

Who Placed Raw Film Manufacture On a Standardized Basis

VIEWED as a single chapter in the history of human progress, the Nineteenth Century is commonly referred to as the Age of Inventions. During this particular period chemistry, medicine, surgery, manufacturing, commerce—all contributed innovations that added to the comfort, convenience and physical welfare of mankind. Perhaps the field that experienced one of the greatest advances during this marvelous age was that of photography; one of the fruits of the rapid strides made in this science was the motion-picture. The idea of operating pictorial designs before the eye so as to simulate the motion of life claimed the attention of inventors all the way from the earliest days of the century down to the late '90's. So the Thaumatrope of Dr. Finton, the Zeotrope of W. G. Horner, Ross's Wheel of Life, Dr. Sellers' Kinematoscope, and Muybridge's disc arrangement of photographic plates (which was laboriously described as the "Zoopraxiscope") pass in review.

Up to Muybridge's experiments one of the chief difficulties was the necessity of using cumbersome photographic plates of glass. A substitute was needed before the idea of pictures in motion could be applied and utilized in a practical and convenient manner. Then along came the Rev. Hannibal Goodwin and solved the problem, at least in principle. He hit upon the idea of using celluloid as a base for the photographic emulsion. George Eastman had previously made use of paper as a supporting base, but this paper had to be oiled in order to be made transparent. With the invention of the Rev. Mr. Goodwin's celluloid base the motion-picture took a tremendous step forward. But there remained the need for somebody to take Goodwin's principle and develop it into a practical, dependable, and ready-to-use product.

George Eastman was the man who stepped into the breach and put all his energy and resource into the task of manufacturing a standardized raw stock that could be employed in the projection machines that were now being perfected. The motion-picture, like most other inventions, is a composite of many ideas and experiments. While the honor of originating it belongs exclusively to no man, the importance of Eastman's contribution in the way of a standardized, dependable raw stock can not be denied. To him belongs the fame of adding the finishing and yet, perhaps, the most important touch that has brought the projection of motion-pictures to its present state of perfection.

Charles Urban: "A manufacturer who has provided the finest of raw material without which there could not have been the progress."

Watterson Rothacker: "Because he is the great outstanding figure in our Industry who does not believe in outstanding figures."

E. V. Durling: "For being the inspiration of the many technical improvements which have come from his organization."

James R. Quirk: "Because he made available to the industry a consistent, constantly improving supply of the film raw stock invented by the Rev. Hannibal Goodwin of Newark. The maintenance of a high standard of technical quality of film has been of basic importance."

P. A. Parsons: "Because he made of the celluloid film a product which was immediately applicable to the motion picture camera and the motion picture projection machine."

William A. Brady: "Because he wants to help you."

Tarkington Baker: "For inventions and perfection of materials and processes. The supreme products of his genius honor him as both inventor and as artist.

The comments made by the jury on the work and personality of George Eastman follow:

P. P. Sheehan selects Mr. Eastman: "For his organization of the film industry."

George Irving chooses Mr. Eastman because: "He perfected the film."

W. G. Mitchell comments: "For his new theatre, a monument to the art-industry."

G. J. Schade votes for Mr. Eastman: "On account of the interest he has taken in perfecting the raw stock."

Rex Beach would honor him: "Because he developed and marketed same."

Paul Lazarus writes: "Because he has been able to provide one of the fundamentals of picture production, 'raw stock' on a commercial basis and at prices that have not proven a hardship to the industry. Because he has always kept abreast of the times."

Arthur S. Friend elects Mr. Eastman: "Broadly for his dominating participation in the development of the photographic art generally; concretely for the consistent and dependable production of the fundamental physical supplies required in the making of pictures, and once more for his unselfish and inspiring contribution of the Eastman Theatre at Rochester."

Reginald Warde says of Mr. Eastman: "Through his untiring efforts and extensive laboratory research work he has standardized motion picture film."

J. D. Williams: "Because of the vast amount of time and money they have devoted to the research work."

Sidney Garrett: "Helped the industry from a technical side, and the first to put the finest raw stock on the market for the printing of motion pictures."

Rupert Hughes: "Maker of material."

C. L. Yearsley: "George Eastman, for scientific photographic development of motion pictures."

Louis J. Selznick: "For his constant improvements in raw stock, without which the work of many others on this list would have been impossible."

Wm. V. D. Kelley: "George Eastman. Producing the first long lengths of film and fostering its improvements."

Rowland Rogers: "For elaborate research and progressive manufacturing methods in the production of motion picture film."

Arthur S. Kane: "George Eastman. For developing raw stock to excellence, and supplying at prices within reach."

THOMAS A. EDISON

Famous Inventor Chosen For Pioneer Development Work

THE mechanical phase of the motion picture art is relatively little known to even those most intimately connected with this great industry. The name Thomas A. Edison stands as the lone familiar luminary, granting to him, by general consensus, the honor of inventing the apparatus making possible and lending the necessary stimulant for the developments eventually leading to the modern motion picture.

"The Father of American Inventions," as Mr. Edison is familiarly known, was thus assured another addition to his countless honors through his selection by a representative jury of personages prominent in this industry to the Motion Picture News' Hall of Fame. Thomas A. Edison not only won the distinction of being among the twelve as chosen, but was, in addition, a keen competitor for first selection.

The statement previously made that the mechanical phase of this industry is relatively little known, is strikingly brought forth through the qualifications submitted by the various jurors in justifying their selection of Mr. Edison. In the quotations following note the sameness in the general hazy conceptions.

W. W. Hodkinson: "Whose inventive genius made motion pictures possible."

Arthur S. Friend: "Inventor, for a genius which is the supporting pillar of everything that is and everything that will be in the motion picture industry."

Arthur S. Kane—"For his inventions and developments."

E. K. Gillett: "Thomas Edison, for his motion picture inventions."

And many others of this same nature, along with a few who simply included Mr. Edison's name in their list of selections.

In justice to Mr. Edison and as information that will undoubtedly be greatly appreciated by those whose interest leads them to read this article, the following excerpt is given from C. Francis Jenkins' paper, "History of the Motion Picture," presented before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Previous to Mr. Edison's activities in this field, transparent picture ribbons with perforations along each edge of the film was invented.

"In 1889, Mr. Dickson began, at Thomas A. Edison's directions, the development of a picture machine. News of what was being done appeared in print from time to time, and the summer of 1894 saw the beginning of the public exhibition of his Kinetoscope, a box into which one looked to see a picture in animation."

"The picture ribbon was passed continuously between a small lamp and the eye of the observer, the view being cut off by a rotating disc about a foot in diameter and having a one-eighth by one-inch radial slit near the periphery. Through this flying slit the observer got a momentary view of each picture frame . . . "

". . . The excellence of the Edison pictures without doubt proved a stimulus to the rapid development of the art, far more than any contribution in mechanical design or new methods—."

James R. Quirk, in qualifying Mr. Edison as a choice, brings forth the salient justification:

"Because, with W. K. L. Dickson as his principal laboratory assistant, he evolved the one workable method of making motion pictures."

Others do justice to the great inventor.

P. A. Parsons: "Because, with his scientific and inventive mind, he evolved practicability out of chaos and thus made the motion picture possible as a business."

Wm. V. D. Kelley: "Early production of long lengths of film and 'pampering the baby'."

Joseph Dannenberg: "Without whose inventive genius and guidance the Kinetoscope would never have anticipated the motion picture camera and projection machine.

Claims made for Thomas A. Edison about which some questions might arise, are:

Tarkington Baker: "For basic ideas and inventions that made the motion picture possible."

Sid Garnett: "Helped the industry from a creative side. He was the first man to invent motion pictures."

Wm. C. Quinby: "Father of the entire business for without his perfection of the motion picture projector there would have been no motion picture industry."

Mr. Edison speaks for himself in a letter to the Editor of the New York Times, June 8, '21:

". . . The main invention was the Kinetograph, which was an instrument for recording ('taking') motion pictures as now used. It was not the apparatus for the reproduction of the pictures, enlarged, on the screen. . . .

"At first I put out several hundred reproducing ('projecting') machines which reproduced the pictures with but little enlargement and I was starting to make additions to the recording instrument to adapt it to a greater enlargement for projection on the screen as we now use it, when Mr. Armat presented to my agents a better device for projection than I had at that time. Soon afterwards Lumiere of France used my recording instrument adding another and different kind of device to adapt it for screen enlargement. These reversed recording machines were introduced as projection machines, but the additions and changes were merely detailed improvements on my prior and basic invention, namely the Kinetograph, or Recording Machine, under which I claim to be the inventor of modern motion pictures."

Jurors furthering his right to the prominence of fame through the MOTION PICTURE NEWS' Hall of Fame are

Harry Crandall: "For his wonderful development of the mechanical and technical phases of the business from its embryonic state."

P. P. Sheehan: "Who made motion pictures possible."

George Irving: "Perfected the intermittent movement, etc."

JOHN D. WILLIAMS

Business Pioneer of First National Fame Is Selected by the Jury

MOST humans share the quality of the lowly sheep in that they are quite content to follow whither the leader may direct. A new trail must be blazed for their timid steps before they will venture off the beaten path. By the same token, the pioneer, whether in history or industry, has always held a fascination peculiarly his own. When Columbus, in the midst of a hostile audience, stood the famous egg on its broken tip and demonstrated that the seemingly impossible was easy, provided somebody pointed the way, he no doubt won the silent admiration of his enemies, despite all their bitterness. The courage of the gambler, the vision of the romanticist, and the sagacity of the philosopher—these are the qualities that mark the pioneer in ample measure; these, too, are the virtues that have ever warmed the heart and imagination of men and won their unswerving allegiance.

The place that J. D. Williams occupies in the history of the motion picture industry is preeminently that of the Business Pioneer. The principles of consumers' cooperation and collective purchasing had already been tried out in other fields when "J. D." first conceived the plan of applying them to the exhibitor's business of securing motion picture product for his screen, but the honor of inaugurating these principles among theatre-owners of the country belongs primarily to him. It is in this sense that J. D. Williams stands forth as a pioneer of the industry. First National, an exhibitors' cooperative organization, stands largely as a monument to his courage, vision, and wisdom. The task Williams possessed the courage, imagination, and astuteness to conceive a practical idea and then put all the powers of his being behind its realization.

A few weeks ago the industry was informed that Mr. Williams had resigned from the general managership of First National. The severance of his relations with this company only stimulates curiosity as to what new venture "J. D." is about to launch. If the past that he has builded be a criterion of the future—and history repeats itself—there is small doubt that fresh laurels will eventually crown the already great achievements of this Business Pioneer.

Here are the estimates of J. D. Williams as voiced by the panel of jurors who have awarded him a niche in the Motion Picture Hall of Fame:

Robert G. Welsh: "He showed the exhibitor and independent creator the unity of thought that could exist between them, thus forever making successful monopoly an impossibility."

C. L. Yearsley votes for: "J. D. Williams, for exhibitor organization and development of independent production."

Arthur S. Friend places J. D. Williams in the forefront of the industry's factors: "For his daring and his courage in organizing and bringing up to its present power, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., which led the way to better development of individual effort as contrasted with factory methods in production."

Arthur S. Kane honors Mr. Williams: "For his vision, unceasing, far-sighted optimism and ability to sway men, which created an institution grossing hundreds of thousands of dollars weekly out of original pledges of $50,000.00."

Fred Beecroft's choice falls on: "J. D. Williams, whose work in behalf of the motion picture and whose fidelity to an ideal made possible the competition to Famous Players and helped to keep the industry open."

Charles H. Christie writes: "J. D. Williams, as an executive who conceived the idea of First National, who encouraged the independent producer, fostering creative effort, with a broad conception of big productions."

J. W. Bender comments: "J. D. Williams, who first demonstrated to the exhibitor of pictures the power in united organization in securing a standard supply of high-grade pictures in accordance with the plan subsequently adopted in the First National."

Theodore L. Hays confers a place in the front ranks on J. D. Williams: "Who evolved and successfully developed a plan of exhibitor association in motion picture distribution."

S. S. McClure, the publisher of the McClure's Magazine, in his selection of candidates also awards the organizer of First National a prominent place in his assemblage of picture celebrities.

Watterson Rothacker selects: "J. D. Williams, because his bigger and better pictures talks are truly inspirational."

William M. Seabury, who is prominent as a legal counsel in motion picture circles, selects J. D. Williams: "Because he was the first to establish an organization in the motion picture industry based upon something of the principles of consumers' cooperation, including the principles of collective purchasing by the exhibitor, the primary consumer of the industry."

Harry Crandall, the prominent Washington exhibitor, chooses: "J. D. Williams, for creating the first cooperative exhibitors' organization, which has meant much to the exhibitor."

C. C. Burr elects J. D. Williams because: "He has been an organizational force of the first magnitude and has done much to promote the interests of the independent exhibitor."

A. G. Stolte writes: "J. D. Williams. To him goes the credit of bringing the exhibitor in closer touch with the producer."

G. J. Schade bestows the laurel: "For inventing the First National idea."

W. W. Hodkinson gives a vote to J. D. Williams: "For his work in organizing exhibitor buying power to build against the aggression of powerful producer groups."

E. R. Rogers describes J. D. Williams as the man: "Whose leadership of an organization solidified the disrupted ranks of exhibitors in a moment of hysteria that bid to destroy the morale and initiative of a host of theatre owners."

WILL H. HAYS

"The Balance Wheel of the Industry" Is Elected By Large Majority

FEW men have had as many honors bestowed upon them as has Will H. Hays. Recognized nationally for his ability as an organizer in connection with the Republican party and as a Postmaster General whose work has probably never been excelled, he has been heralded the length and breadth of the country.

But with all of the past honors Hays will probably take as much satisfaction in the expressions of good will and favorable comment expressed for him by the biggest men in the motion picture industry as he has through any of his past achievements. Not all of the jury of one hundred sitting for Motion Picture News placed Hays among the twelve whose names go into the Hall of Fame. No one man received the unanimous approval of the whole one hundred as among the twelve leaders, but Hays is among the twelve, highly rated, and none has had more kindly words of praise than the big chief of the industry.

As a sample of this might be cited the comment of William Brandt in connection with his list of twelve. Mr. Brandt says of Hays:

"Will Hays needs no comment. His wonderful work is too recent to comment. Suffice to say he has done more in the short time he is in office to rehabilitate the movies in the good grace of the public than any one person has done since their inception. It is the exhibitor, who is on the firing line, facing the public, who feels the effect of General Hays within the industry, and the exhibitor is glad and hopes Hays keeps up the good work."

W. W. Hodkinson, a pioneer in the industry, is, perhaps, a severe critic ordinarily, but he is always willing to give credit where credit is due.

Mr. Hodkinson writes of Hays:

"He has focused the public mind on motion pictures to a greater degree than has been accomplished by anyone else and by so doing has placed it on trial before the public, which is watching to see the promised reforms and improvements realized."

Lewis J. Selznick is as vitally interested in the welfare of the industry as any one connected with it, and it is quite a compliment to Hays when he gives him credit for developing hundreds of thousands of new friends for motion pictures.

Others who helped place Mr. Hays in the Hall of Fame comment as follows:

J. W. Binder—"Will H. Hays has been, perhaps, the biggest single constructive force in the history of the picture."

Bruce Barton—"Mr. Hays is a natural organizer who has undoubtedly accomplished splendid results in the short time he has been connected with the industry."

William A. Brady—"I selected Will H. Hays because he was a wise selection."

H. B. Franklin—"In the short time in which Mr. Hays has given his efforts to the motion picture he has proven himself to be a genius in coordination and creating in the motion picture business a spirit of harmony and progress and has placed it in the high standing that it deserves among many that had previously misconstrued the motion pictures."

W. Griffith Mitchell—"Because of his executive ability and efforts to create a better understanding of the industry by the public."

Rex Beach—"Because of his work against censorship."

Geo. J. Schade—"For keeping the screen clean."

Harry Crandall—"Will H. Hays makes a wonderful balance wheel, and for the prestige he brings to the industry."

Here is what Mr. Selznick says:

"I select Mr. Hays for his great work in developing the prestige of the motion picture business; for making hundreds of thousands of new friends for the business, and for his boundless vision and faith, which have been an inspiration to all in the industry."

If Hays is everything L. L. Stewart says of him what chance would there be to eliminate him from any list of the famed in the industry. When a man is regarded as a diplomat, peacemaker and ambassador he is surely endowed with faculties that must inevitably bring great results. Stewart writes:

"Peacemaker, diplomat, ambassador . . . . the one who has ability and talents to back up these three specifications in an industry like the photoplay, and especially when his energy must swing between the large crowds of people, both inside and outside . . . . is surely one of the twelve persons of note. In a few short months Will Hays seems to have proved his ability. So, though he is the most recent 'big man,' his name is recorded."

Referring to Mr. Hays in his list, Mr. Lasky says:

"Because of his incisive grasp of the essentials of the economic and, as I might say, sociologic phases of the motion picture. Coming into the work as an outsider, and rapidly assimilating the integral characteristics of the industry, he has already accomplished marvels in readjusting, stabilizing, and establishing a closer understanding between component parts. Will H. Hays is undoubtedly one of the greatest forces which has ever entered our industry."

Sid Grauman—"He left one of the foremost posts the Government had to offer in order to lend his support and aid to this great industry."

J. R. Grainger—"Because he steered the motion picture industry to victory in Massachusetts."

R. H. Cochrane—"Because he established higher ideals for the industry than it ever had before."

Frederick Palmer—"For courage in assuming the role of Daniel in the Lions' Den."

T. L. Hays—"I select Will Hays, through whose constructive effort among producers, public opinion regarding the motion picture has been established."

W. C. Quimby—"A newcomer in our midst who evidently has accomplished wonderful things in the short time he has been with us."

H. C. Horater—"Because of his efforts to elevate the motion picture business."

CECIL DEMILLE

Creator of Artistic Productions Embodying High Box-Office Value.

CECIL B. DEMILLE'S name immediately conjures up a very definite and distinctive type of screen entertainment—lavish, intimate, satiric, daring, broad in scope and fine in detail, artistic in execution yet with strong box-office appeal and exploitation angles. No other producer, perhaps, has created great box-office pictures and retained so many artistic elements, time after time.

Consequently, it was to be expected that his name would be found among the twelve selected for the Hall of Fame by the jury choosing this group.

The release of a Cecil B. DeMille production is always something of an event in the industry. Stars have come and gone, new directors have arisen and old ones have disappeared, but the place which DeMille has carved out for himself seems secure.

Yet, while DeMille productions have a certain definite personality which has remained much the same throughout, a gradual evolution has come about in his work which is interesting to trace.

The first which comes to mind is "Joan the Woman," in which he showed the feeling for realistic detail gained, perhaps, from his association with Belasco, and also his flair for the spectacular.

It was with this picture in mind that Arthur S. Friend, in serving on the jury, chose DeMille. Mr. Friend says, in explaining his choice:

"I pick Cecil B. DeMille for his never-to-be-forgotten production of 'Joan the Woman'."

A. G. Stolte, in telling why he picked Cecil B. DeMille, says:

"For direction, his capability of massive productions, combined with a modern story, the selecting of characters and bringing out in his motion pictures selective stars."

The name of DeMille soon became identified rather closely with society drama, but in "Something to Think About" and "Forbidden Fruit" he showed that his genius was by no means confined to one strata of society.

The list is by no means complete, but it serves to illustrate how prolific DeMille has been in turning out productions which have been outstanding, and how wide has been the range which he has covered.

The reasons assigned by some of the other jurors for voting for Mr. DeMille are as follows:

Theodore L. Hays: "Cecil B. DeMille, whose selections of casts, grasp of detail and masterly direction have given the screen some of its most notable productions."

J. D. Williams: "Because of his creation of romantic splendor in pictures that has done a great deal to keep certain classes interested."

Lem Stewart: "He probably appreciates the fact that it is 'art to conceal art,' but practices the policy of creating with a lavishness that attracts attention to itself * * * and by winning the crowds through an appeal of the fantastic is thereby cultivating a taste for artistic elements of less general appeal but a great deal more merit."

Herschel Stuart: "Because of his vision towards a box-office angle which makes the exhibitor money; also as maker of stars, which also means money for exhibitors."

M. H. Field: "For being the foremost creator of 'audience' pictures."

Fred J. Beecroft: "Cecil B. DeMille, whose influence for good, consistent pictures is greater than Griffith's."

E. V. Richards: "I pick Cecil B. DeMille for his ability to create uniformly successful box-office pictures, artistically done."

Prominent in many of these has been that feature most closely associated with DeMille in the fan mind—the historical vision sequence, staged in spectacular fashion. In "Manslaughter," for instance, there was the Roman vision sequence, paralleling the modern story and showing the similarity of the decadence of the Romans, in the latter days of the empire, to conditions existing at present in certain quarters.

DeMille's associate and co-worker, Jesse L. Lasky, in speaking of this, says:

"Because of his remarkable creative work; his achievements in the realms of pure artistry coupled with practical 'box-office values'; his grasp on the public ideals and demands in photodramas; his use in a magnificent manner of the vision effect, which has virtually developed a new phase in motion pictures."

He has been criticized at various times for these vision scenes, at times seemingly introduced without adequate reason, but it must be remembered that the public has been extremely slow to accept the costume picture, and that such visions, inserted in modern dramas have been the one way of gradually "selling" the fans on the desirability of the historical drama. It is only recently, generally speaking, that great success has been achieved by costume dramas, and who shall say what part Cecil B. DeMille's historical visions played in educating the fans to appreciate these?

W. G. Mitchell: "Whose directing is unsurpassed. His spectacular and luxurious scenes satisfy the public's craving to indulge in extravagance."

C. C. Burr: "Cecil B. DeMille, for his work in educating the public to appreciate the finer elements in pictures."

E. R. Rogers: "His productions are the acme of artistry plus entertainment. Which proves he puts more into the business of making pictures than just working hours."

Julian Johnson: "Because he is the best optical reporter of our time, chronicling the follies of the hour with an unerring camera, and sometimes with a spirit of satire which is far from superficial."

H. C. Horater: "Because he is a master in luxurious productions."

Sid Grauman: "Has raised the directorial art to its present height, and many of his productions will take their place among the screen classics."

CARL LAEMMLE

Who Fought the Early Monopoly Threatening the Industry

WHAT memories of the early hectic days of motion pictures—the good old days many pioneers call them—are recalled when the subject up for discussion is Carl Laemmle.

Imp one reel dramas with Mary Pickford starred and King Baggot playing her leads, "Lucille Love" with Francis Ford and Grace Cunard featured, the first serial picture to really make a hit—playing to S.R.O. everywhere and putting a crimp in General Film Company that it never got over, Mary Fuller, who dropped out of sight all at once after making a name for herself that still endures—got married so somebody said and quit trouping—, Bluebird pictures built on the principle of "the play's the thing," and nationally advertised, Lois Weber's productions that made a half a dozen stars over night and a barrel of money for exhibitors, all come back, in the mind's-eye, as if they did not represent the events of a pre-historic age—according to the way time is figured in the film business.

In such a retrospection is to be found many a milestone in the path of the infant industry's progress. Many an apparently unsurmountable obstacle was overcome. Many a hard fight was won and many a progressive step in which the whole film world had an interest, was taken.

And through these times of stress, Carl Laemmle stayed at the helm of Universal, meeting the numberless problems as they came—making history for the motion picture business and incidentally doing pretty well for himself. Universal City came into being, General Film Company gave up the ghost, one and two reelers went out of fashion, competitors sprung up on every side, but Universal has kept right on doing business and Mr. Laemmle has continued as president.

And so it is that when our jury empaneled to select the twelve greatest people of the industry looked about for candidates Mr. Laemmle's name went down if for no other reason than for his deeds of other years, his battles in the right when the business needed aid to the nth. degree and the record he has made as an independent producer and distributor. Mr. Laemmle has consistently fought for the stabilization of product and the uplift of the industry. That he has unusual ability at organization is well attested by the success of the company he heads. But we prefer quoting from the letters of the Hall of Fame jurors to convince the reader of his right to a place on the list.

Fred S. Meyer, prominent as an exhibitor is among the staunch boosters for the President of Universal. He even goes so far as to say that without Mr. Laemmle there might not be a motion picture industry today. However, that remark is qualified as will be seen from Mr. Myer's cirticism in submitting Mr. Laemmle's name among his list of candidates for the industry's Hall of Fame:

"I select Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film Manufacturing Company because in 1910, he, single handed fought the Patents Company. Without Mr. Laemmle there might not be an industry today or else one a la Standard Oil or American Tobacco."

Arthur S. Friend is among those who include Mr. Laemmle in their list.. Like many others he considers him entitled to a place in the Hall of Fame because of his early successful fight against the shackles of monopoly.

Mr. Friend writes:

"Mr. Laemmle, President of Universal Film Manufacturing Company is among my selections because of his determined and successful fight against the Patents Company, and for his freeing of the industry from the shackles of monopoly."

Many of those who advocate Mr. Laemmle's candidacy do so because of the manner in which he opened up the independent field along both producing and distribution lines. Among those who give him a vote because of this is P. A. Parsons, whose comment is as follows:

"Mr. Laemmle is selected because of his early and successful battle for the independent in both producing and distributing. He pioneered the cause in these directions."

Fred Beecroft couples Carl Laemmle and William Fox as the pilots of the independents. He writes:

"There are two men who stand out today as pioneers in the opening of the independent field. They are Carl Laemmle and William Fox. Between them they succeded in beating the Patents Company."

Rex Beach comes in with the majority and recognizes Mr. Laemmle for his early efforts. The noted author writes:

"Mr. Laemmle must be included because he was the first independent to fight the film trust."

Reginald Warde says: "I place on my list the name of Mr. Laemmle for organizing and establishing national distribution in the early days of this industry in the fight against the General Film Patent Company."

C. L. Yearsley says: "The President of Universal must be included for the organization and stabilization of production."

R. H. Cochrane's selection is made along the same lines as many others. He writes: "Because his successful fight against monopoly was responsible for the fact that there is more than one company in existence today."

Theo. L. Hays' recommendation is as follows: "Constructive as a pioneer and progressive as an independent producer and distributor."

Perley Poore Sheehan: "For the vision and organizing power he brought to motion pictures."

E. V. Richards says: "Mr. Laemmle pioneered a cause that established the independent field."

Elmer Pearson: "Mr. Laemmle is included in my list because among other things I consider his early efforts highly beneficial."

William A. Johnston: "Stabilizer of the industry through his sturdy stand for independence."

The Year's Best Pictures—And Why

By LAURENCE REID

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS in "Robin Hood," "Orphans of the Storm," and "When Knighthood Was in Flower." And the greatest of these—. But why stop with these spectacular achievements in a resume of the year's best pictures——when any resume must, in all fairness, include a goodly dozen? Walter Camp has presented his daily dozen, which if practised faithfully throughout the year would find us each day, in every way, getting better and better.

There is no doubt about our yearly dozen giving us real setting up exercises. Mind you, there is no physical exertion attached to the scheme. We unconsciously sit up in our seats and pay the strictest attention—and that's all there is to it. But where Walter Camp is unable to help you financially we are able to offer you something in the shape of a rich gold mine, if you accept our yearly dozen.

Anyone who follows the photoplay at all must admit that it is getting better and better—and this is said in spite of the fact that censorship would make cowards of all screen authors and directors. Rex Ingram has come out on record—and Stroheim has agreed with him—that the screen cannot progress if one must continually make pictures for the childish mind. It is true that the conventions are obeyed too faithfully—that an imaginative director with revolutionary ideas is hampered from the start because of the hue and cry—"What of the children?" Certainly Shakespeare when he conceived "Othello," "Hamlet," and other tragedies wasn't thinking of the nursery. So if we intend to make any real advancement in story and plot we must forget the conventions in general and the cradle in particular.

It is doubtful if the screen can progress further in a technical way. Photography and lighting have become wellnigh perfect. But the ideas with few exceptions have remained unchanged for the past decade. Program pictures are released with familiar formulas. They are made entirely from a commercial viewpoint. Which brings up the argument—and argument with no cause for dispute—that the finest photoplays are produced by those artists who are not guided by schedule contracts—who are more or less on their own, presenting their own ideas—who will succeed or fail on their efforts. The time is theirs to accomplish something really worth while. And theirs is a different public—a public eager to see and learn—a public comprising sincere well-wishers of the silent drama.

Where would Griffith or Ingram be if they worked on schedule? Or Chaplin or Fairbanks or Lloyd or Mary Pickford or Norma Talmadge? They have taken the time to search for new ideas—and then have taken more time to present them. These artists and several others are carrying the torches which are taking the screen out of darkness. Here we are crying in the wilderness for REAL DEVELOPMENT in our photoplays.

If all our cheap program pictures could assemble and walk off the sets like the rats which followed the Pied Piper—if they only could follow our screen Pied Pipers, Griffith and Ingram and a few other leaders, whose music is not inspired through a magic flute but through a magic megaphone—the photoplay would reach that artistic plane where even the scoffers could not indict it. Then we pause, for the public must have entertainment. And picture houses are here, there and everywhere—the producer is in business to make money, and so is the middleman. And the spectator pays and pays. But he'll pay more and be glad of it when something extraordinary comes along—something like "The Four Horsemen," for example.

The year's best—the goodly dozen—includes pictures which have not been produced for the program. Rather have they been produced to enrich the screen—to win new disciples—to show that artistic values and comercial values can be related. Each year finds its outstanding product. 1920 gave us "Humoresque," "The Mark of Zorro," and "Way Down East." Last year we had "Tol'able David," "The Kid," and "The Three Musketeers." 1922 makes film history because of some notably fine productions. It surpasses the years of yesterday with the general all-around excellence of its product. Pictures have been created through real labor and genuine enthusiasm.

It isn't remarkable that Douglas Fairbanks is represented again when we follow his determination to eclipse his preceding effort. We anticipate no argument that "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" will be accepted as the finest canvas of the year. Its opulence of background, its story interest, the richness of its pageantry, its accumulative suspense, its picturesque characterization—these qualities and many more entitle it to a firm and secure place at the top. The other eleven pictures are not presented in the order of their excellence; they have merely been shuffled like the cards in a deck. Won't you agree with us that they represent the highest attainments in the art of photoplay? All have movement, color, picturesqueness, romance, clearly defined characterizations and plots, and background. All of them are competently played and some are more than competently played.

We take great pleasure in presenting: "Grandma's Boy" (Associated Exhibitors), "Tess of the Storm Country" (United Artists), "When Knighthood Was In Flower" (Cosmopolitan-Paramount), "Peg O' My Heart" (Metro), "Orphans of the Storm" (Griffith-United Artists), "Blood and Sand" (Paramount), "The Storm" (Universal), "The Prisoner of Zenda" (Metro), "Smilin' Through" (First National), "The Sin Flood" (Goldwyn), and "Nanook of the North" (Pathe). There is appeal here for everyone. Variety is well emphasized in the list even though the spectacular note is dominant in "Orphans of the Storm," "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," and "When Knighthood Was In Flower." It also carries spiritual qualities in "Smilin' Through," and "The Sin Flood," and it has a definite place in "Tess of the Storm Country," although that opus is mostly a heart-tug of homespun humanity.

What of the humor? Harold Lloyd attends to that—with an individuality and talent, expressive and inimitable. "Grandma's Boy" is a delightful picture. For sheer novelty of background and characterization—for stark realism showing the primeval instinct, the will to live, we have "Nanook of the North," a work founded upon a labor of love and enthusiasm. "Peg O' My Heart" is blessed with rich human interest and also is flavored with quaint humor and romance. Take notice of Laurette Taylor's superb pantomime in her justly famous role of Peg. She makes her screen debut and comes forth one of its most gifted artists. Certainly no other actress we might name could possible achieve the depth of understanding which is indicated here. For sheer charm of caprice and whimsicality her Peg will endure down through the corridors of time. Fairbanks' vital energy is as dominant as ever in his role of the gay, but chivalrous bandit, Robin Hood. It is a tireless endeavor to humanize the picturesque robber of a day when knights were bold.

Mary Pickford demonstrates again why she has a firm place in the hearts of the public through her ineffable charm and talent. She is human and lovable as Tess, the role which took her on the high road to fame and which she treasured so much that she humanized it for a second edition. In "Orphans of the Storm," Lillian Gish tugs at the emotions with her eloquent hands and her truly expressive face. She transports the spectator with her mute suffering as a storm-tossed flower of the French Revolution. James Kirkwood is always dependable—an actor thoroughly grounded in his art. So is House Peters. The former enriches the spiritual quality in "The Sin Flood," and the latter's performance in "The Storm" approaches a

THE EXPLOITEERS AND THEIR BOSSES

THE BOSSES

CLAUD SAUNDERS

WHEN the history of exploitation is written, the name of Claud Saunders must stand as the pioneer exponent of its application on a national scale. Four years ago he conceived the idea of an exploitation department operated by a distributing organization, actively aiding exhibitors in putting over their pictures. The idea met with little favor, at first, and it took him some time to "sell" the idea. He finally persuaded the executives of Famous Players-Lasky that the plan was workable, and they gave him eight men to exploit "The Miracle Man." The results were so startling that he was shortly after given a staff of 30 men. His department will celebrate its fourth birthday on July 10, 1923. Its campaigns on "The Old Homestead," "Blood and Sand" and others have been notable. Mr. Saunders' assistant is Leon J. Bamberger.

It is the policy of the department to give all stunts a practical try-out. Then, if it proves workable and gets results, it is broadcasted through "The Exploiteer," and is applied nationally. Such an idea, for instance, was the fake bull fight stunt used in connection with "Blood and Sand," in which the billing of a bull fight was used to stir up advance excitement.

NED HOLMES

THE name "Ned Holmes" is synonymous with "exploitation" in the minds of First National franchise and sub-franchise holders, for he has been at the head of this department since its inception. Consistent, practical exploitation has been the keynote of the department's work, and a high type of service has been rendered to exhibitors from the exchange centres. One hears very little of the work of the department, but the many exhibitors who have been aided by it know that it has fulfilled its function admirably. The Norma pearls tie-up which Mr. Holmes' department arranged was one of the most widely used stunts of the year, and the new "wink and win" contest on "East Is West" bids fair to rival it in widespread application.

The Norma pearls tie-up is one of the most thorough mercantile tie-ups on record and was taken part in by Lichtenstein Bros., manufacturers of the pearls, on a large scale. Since this tie-up directly benefitted the merchant as well as the theatre, it was used in a very large number of cities, and is still being used. More recently this department engineered tie-ups with the National Biscuit Company, M. Witmark & Sons, Milton Bradley & Co., and others, for high grade "Lorna Doone" hook-ups.

EDWARD BONNS

COMING from Warner Brothers only a few months ago, Edward Bonns has already built up in Goldwyn's force of Goldwynners a highly efficient body of exploitation men. The stunt which was engineered in New York, in which the incorporation of an association of "Brothers Under the Skin" obtained columns of publicity in the leading newspapers of the country, was one of the outstanding bits of press-agentry of the year. The department has also been active on many other productions, however, including the great variety of tie-ups arranged on "Remembrance," the various teaser stunts worked on "Sherlock Holmes," and, more recently, the campaigns on "Hungry Hearts." All of these campaigns have been marked by unusual thoroughness and originality.

RAYMOND CAVANAGH

UNDER the direction of Raymond Cavanagh, Universal's force of exploitation men have made the phrase "The Storm Is Coming" almost as famous as the U. S. Weather Bureau. Which is another way of saying that the campaigns staged all over the country on "The Storm" have been among the most successful of the year. Every possible angle has been seized upon in these campaigns and they have been models of live-wire exploitation. Other activities of the department have included "Under Two Flags," in which street ballyhoos and elaborate fronts have been a feature, and "Human Hearts," in which cut-out hearts of every nature, contests, lobby displays and tie-ups have been employed. Mr. Cavanagh is assisted by Marc Lachmann.

NAT G. ROTHSTEIN

ALTHOUGH the exploitation department of Film Booking Offices is one of the youngest, it has already distinguished itself under the leadership of Nat G. Rothstein. Exploitation history has been written by its campaigns on "In the Name of the Law," which has been tied up with police departments everywhere. This tie-up has made it possible to obtain all manner of special privileges in various cities, the results of which have been a tribute to the power of organized, intensive exploitation. The department has by no means confined its activities to this one picture, and since the policy of this company is to make pictures with definite exploitation angles, much may be expected. Mr. Rothstein is assisted by Al Boasberg, Home Office Representative.

LIVE WIRES AMONG THE EXHIBITORS

[EDITOR'S NOTE: Last year at this time Motion Picture News listed 700 exhibitors whose exploitation and presentation ideas has been presented in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau. This year, showing the great growth and spread of exploitation, the list includes 1,024 names—1,024 live-wire exhibitors whose campaigns have been considered worthy of reproduction for the benefit of other exhibitors. The increase in the amount of exploitation done is even greater than this would indicate, since it is possible to use but a fraction of this material which comes in, and it is more than ever an honor to be represented on this list. It has been a great year for exploitation. Increasing efforts are being made by the distributing companies to aid exhibitors in putting over their pictures, and more and more are exhibitors coming to realize that they must work for their pictures, instead of merely expecting their pictures to work for them. Gone is the day when patrons come without effort on the part of the exhibitor. Pictures must now be merchandised just as any other commodity which is not an absolute daily necessity, and exhibitors everywhere are adjusting themselves to the changed condition. To the names on this list is due recognition for the material which has made possible the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of Motion Picture News for the last twelve months. They have proved themselves live-wire showmen, and credit is given where credit is due.

There has been a tendency during the year toward ard exploitation of a more practical sort—exploitation that will bring to the theatre the right class of people for that particular picture, exploitation that is inexpensive, tie-ups that benefit the merchant as well as the theatre manager and make it possible to go back to the same merchant for further tie-ups. There have been, too, during the year, many new developments in exploitation—new ideas and new angles on the old ideas. But most significant of all has been the increased interest everywhere in sane exploitation and the increasing effort on the part of exhibitors to get the most from their pictures.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

THE Lackawanna Railroad started something a few months ago when it equipped its de luxe trains with the radio, enabling the passengers to listen in on the events of the wide, wide world, while speeding over the rails. The Lackawanna showed real initiative in giving its travelers such service.

But what of the Chicago & Alton Railroad? Their idea is so simple it is a wonder that it has not been thought of before. They have merely taken the tip from the ocean liners by equipping their best trains with a screen, a projection booth, an operator and plenty of pictures. And as the traveler journeys on through the night he may enter the theatre car and forget the monotony of the rails and the discomforts of his berth in watching Lloyd, Chaplin, Keaton, Fairbanks, Pickford, the Talmadges and others who bring us screen entertainment.

Who would not toss a magazine aside or give up tossing in a berth to use up an hour in the theatre car? We predict the Chicago & Alton idea will be widely imitated. The tourist and the steady traveler will hop aboard the train that provides them with the best service.

WITH all the publishers and book-dealers spreading themselves through alluring advertisements inviting the reading public to buy their wares, we are taking the tip from them and advising you to get the Christmas number of the NEWS—even if you have to steal it from your neighbor. You will want to read it, and so will your wife and children. And you and your folks will have all the time in the world to look it over Christmas afternoon. As Life would say: Obey the Impulse.

PLEASE be advised that Charles Ray has some big operations under way just now. The expansion of his policy should interest every picturegoer. At present his plant has been turned into a shipyard to meet the demands of "The Courtship of Miles Standish," his next picture. Just outside the office door looms the Mayflower—an exact size replica of the historical sloop, 102 feet long. The star would have you understand that the framework of the ship was built of steel by the Baker Iron Works, and is the first all-steel motion picture set ever constructed.

HAVE you been watching Ernest Torrence's pantomime the past year? Here is an actor who will bear watching—an actor whose mobile face and rugged physique belong on the screen and nowhere else. Would you know that Mr. Torrence is endowed with a splendid baritone voice and that it found expression in several musical comedies? This sterling actor is also a comedian, and is particularly adept in his portrayal of the canny Scot, but on the silversheet his distinct personality is best suited for heavy drama.

We all remember his superb pantomime in "Tola'ble David." Torrence is so much in earnest that he always gives his best. There is nothing lackadaisical about his acting. We have had "heavies" and "heavies" but never a heavy who can make you grip your seat like this big Scotchman. No matter what he essays he gives it breadth and substance. You will remember him in "Broken Chains" and his performance in "The Kingdom Within" will also live in the memory. Grim reality stalks across the screen when Torrence lends his presence to a pitcure.

THE erstwhile dramatic critics, Louis Sherwin and Clayton Hamilton, believe in good titles. Mr. Sherwin has doubtless contributed a fine assortment for the Goldwyn production, "The Christian," while we know from having seen it that Mr. Hamilton has done a neat job of titling for Hodkinson's "The Kingdom Within."

JOHN CECIL GRAHAM, managing director of Famous Players Film Company, Ltd., and Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., accompanied by Mrs. Graham and their daughter, Dorothy, is in New York on his annual visit to the home office of F. P.-L. C. Mr. Graham says the outstanding feature of the picture industry in Great Britain during the last twelve months has been the reduction in the length of time between the American and British release dates.

J. I. SCHNITZER, vice-pres. of F. B. O., returned to the H. O. this week from a trip to the R-C studios in Cal.

IT is Ferdinand Earle's opinion that the greatest ally of the motion picture art is just, intelligent criticism of pictures on the part of reviewers. Mr. Earle directed the "Rubaiyat" and will shortly begin work on "The Easiest Way," in which Theda Bara will be starred by Selznick.

AFTER sentencing himself to thirty days on the Coast in the interest of his company's productions for the ensuing year, W. H. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, will return to New York.

ELMER CLIFTON'S "Down to the Sea in Ships," has opened at the Orpheum in Detroit—following Doug's big show, "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood." The whaling picture has already been shown in New Bedford, Providence, Philadelphia and Boston. The Detroit press should offer just as many encomiums as the press of the cities in the East.

LIST' to a tale of Alaska—of the far-off places where the muck called gold is mined. We have with us J. F. Spickett, owner and manager of the Palace theatre, Juneau, who tells of the troubles the Alaskan exhibitors are having in getting pictures. "I have to make this long trip to Seattle because I want to see the films I am booking. The people of Alaska are just as keen picture fans as you will find anywhere in the U. S. A. and, like the people in the States, they don't want any more 'shooting gallery' photoplays. They are willing to wait quite a time to get the high-class plays but they don't want to get out of date ones. They read the latest books and the newspapers and know what is going on.

"Business up in the north hasn't been so good because of the slump in mining and we must have high-class pictures to bring them at all. Because of the closing of some of the big mines the population of Juneau has decreased from 5,600 to 2,500 since the end of the war. Fishing, canning and government offices provide most of the industrial activities of the southern Alaskan cities."

Mr. Spickett built the Palace theatre in 1912. Back in 1896 he took a minstrel show to Alaska and he brought the first pictures up there in 1906. The theatre seats 640 and music is an important feature of his program.

We'll wager an asterisk against a quotation mark that you'll find a picture show in the topmost reaches of Iceland.

MYRON SELZNICK will arrive in New York the end of the week after a business trip to the Coast. His purpose at the western studios was to see that everything is progressing with "Rupert of Hentzau," and "The Common Law."

Federal Government to Work with M.P.P.D.A.

President Harding in Letter to Will Hays Endorses Steps to Develop Pedagogic Films

PRESIDENT HARDING has accorded his unqualified approval to the efforts made by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, of which Will H. Hays is the head, working with the National Education Association, to develop pedagogic pictures for use in the classroom. The President's endorsement is contained in a letter addressed to Mr. Hays by the nation's chief executive. The communication from the White House also assures Mr. Hays the co-operation of the Federal Department of Education. The letter follows:

"My Dear Mr. Hays:

"Your most interesting letter concerning the plans for co-operation between the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and the educational leadership of the country is received, and I am pleased, of course, to note this progress and to assure you of the co-operation of the Federal Department of Education. I am mindful, too, of the efforts being made by your association for the general betterment of pictures which is a distinct contribution to the general good.

"Your letter has prompted me to a little thinking-out-loud about the educational value and possibilities of the screen. Possibly in my inexperience and lack of technical information I shall sound extremely amateurish, so I apologize in advance for rushing in where wiser folks might fear to tread.

"Your address to the National Educational Association has impressed me greatly; especially your conviction that the films represent an educational potentiality, despite that you are not quite sure how it is to be utilized. I have long been precisely of the same mind. Unquestionably, for the purpose of merely imparting information, the most effective approach to the mind is through the vision: "seeing is believing." Much of what we study rather mechanically and zestfully in youth and, therefore, rather futilely, might be made dramatically interesting if we could see it.

"It seems to me that the screen could be made an effective medium for illuminating our studies in history and geography. Next to studying geography by seeing the world, its people and its institutions, would be studying it with the aid of the moving picture. Next to studying history by the procedure of living through its epochs, its areas and its periods, would be that of seeing its actors and evolutions presented before our eyes.

"These things, it has long seemed to me, might be accomplished by a proper use of the moving picture. I do not want to be understood as assuming that education can or ought to be made a mere pleasure, a titillation of the fancy, by making it too easy. I would not by any means turn the school room into a moving picture theatre and save the pupil from serious, hard, disciplining mental effort. On the other hand, I would use the picture as a means to enlist the pupil's interest in the real work that must be involved in acquiring any education worthy of the name.

"Let me hasten to say that I have no formula for effecting a co-ordination of the printed page and the picture screen, in the process of education. I have some general ideas, however. I remember when I was quite young, somebody put into my hands a copy of Thackery's 'Henry Esmond.' I read it not merely as an absorbing interesting story but as a revelation of the life, manners and institutions of the early eighteenth century. I found myself hunting for books to illumine further the history of that period. I think the reading of that one novel did as much to give me a real interest in the study of history as any other experience of my boyhood years.

"I do not know whether anybody has presented 'Henry Esmond' in a screen drama. I do not even know whether, as a commercial proposition, it could be thus dramatized. I should think it could. Likewise I should think that if it were done in a series of reels, and if these, gradually unfolding the story, were interspersed with studies and lectures on the history of the period, it would constitute an ideal method not merely of imparting knowledge, but of inspiring a desire for more of it, to be gained through further reading and study.

"Let me take another of my favorites among the historical novels. If we are to understand the present and attempt to conjecture the future of the world, we need to know a good deal about its backgrounds in the past. The Europe of the later middle ages, of the period just before and at the beginning of the Renaissance, would be wonderfully portrayed in a similar series of pictures dramatizing 'The Cloister and the Hearth.' I do not know whether anybody reads 'The Cloister and the Hearth' any more, but I am sure that one family with which I am pretty well acquainted would be glad to patronize a combination of picture serials and really intelligent talks, with this story as the basis, and with the purpose of giving a real conception and understanding of the Europe of that epoch.

"The other day there came into my hands a copy of Irving Bacheller's 'In the Days of Poor Richard.' You know what it is; an historical novel of the pre-revolutionary and revolutionary period in our country. I think the author perhaps overcrowded its pages in the attempt to introduce about all the great figures of those times. We saw King George III as the incognito spectator of a duel on the outskirts of London; we were with Washington at the siege of Boston and during the campaigns in New York and New Jersey; we met Hamilton, and John Adams, and Benedict Arnold; we had a delightful picture of crossing the Atlantic in an old-time sailing ship; we saw the war between the Indians and the Whites in the great woods of what was then the Northwest; we listened to Mr. Adams's lectures on the political relations between the colonies and the mother country, and to General Washington's expressions of that wonderful, unswerving faith which he always maintained and which enabled him to lay the foundation of our republic.

"Now, it seems to me such a book, not slavishly reproduced on the screen, but used rather as inspiration and general theme, might be made the basis of a most inspiring and illuminating treatment, for educational purposes, of the revolutionary period. I may confess that ever since I read Mr. Trevelyan's History of the American Revolution, I have wondered if some genius of the movies might not arise who could take Trevelyan's History, Paul Leicester Fords' 'Janice Meredith,' Parkman's Histories of the Indians, and, now, this Bacheller book and various others of the same sort, and prepare out of them a combined screen and lecture presentation of the dramatic things in our country's history.

"It seems to me that I have read recently that somebody was movieizing Mr. Wells' 'Outline of History.' If I am mistaken I shall take the risk of saying, anyhow, that I think there must somewhere be a big enough genius of the movies to accomplish this, and to make it an extremely useful work. Along with it I would like to see Mr. Van Loon's 'Story of Mankind' handled in the same way. For the school room and the college, I would by no means confine the teaching of such subpects to the entertainment and incidental suggestion that the pictures would provide. I would supplement these with a great deal of very serious, very earnest, and perhaps to some people uninteresting study of books, maps and charts; with lectures and a carefully organized line of collateral reading.

"If I have thus far confined myself to the possibilities of the screen in the study of geography and history, it is not because I doubt its usefulness in other directions. I cannot help believing that a properly directed corps of camera men might make a series of films at, for example, the Bureau of Standards, which would be of the utmost assistance and inspiration in many scientific studies.

"I suspect that a competent moving picture producer who chanced also to be a reasonably good amateur geologist would have no great difficulty devising a series of pictures that would wonderfully illuminate studies in that fascinating department of natural science. Again let me say, I would by no means eliminate the studying; I would at all times keep in mind that there cannot be real education without those efforts that train and discipline the mind and develop its powers of analysis and correlation.

"Perhaps these rambling suggestions are without any value at all in connection with your efforts. Perhaps they will be rather amusing than useful; at any rate they represent the general notions of one who feels a real interest in the thing you are trying to do, and has a firm belief that somehow it can be done. I hope the co-operation of the moving picture people and the educators may find ways of producing the results which I know you have in mind.

"Very sincerely yours,

(Signed) "WARREN G. HARDING."

"Welcome Prosperity Dinner" Scheme Brings Protests

PROTESTS have reached this office against a "Welcome Prosperity Dinner" so called "of the Motion Picture Industry" to be held at the Hotel Astor the evening of January 11th. David R. Hochreich is treasurer. The names of Adolph Zukor, Marcus Loew, P. A. Powers and B. S. Moss appear among others on the dinner announcement. Inquiries at the office of Mr. Zukor and Mr. Loew indicate that their names were not authorized.

We are also informed that the tickets are offered at $25.00 each, and that the plot shows 345 tables with ten chairs each.

New Fox Exchange Building Opens in Washington

At the formal opening last Thursday evening at the new Fox exchange building in Washington, D. C., prominent figures in the nation's life, including Senators Johnson of California and Harrison of Mississippi, were guests of the Fox Film Corporation. It was also the 19th anniversary of William Fox's connection with the industry.

Senator Hiram Johnson presented a flag to the building. Senator Harrison paid tribute to the Fox enterprise as evidenced in the new edifice, a $250,000 structure. Guests were received by district manager J. S. Hebrew, former manager here, and branch manager George A. Roberts.

Feminine Texas Stars Organize Club

Six of the screen's best known feminine stars have organized a Texas Club for "purely social purposes." Florence Vidor, Bebe Daniels, Hope Hampton, Corinne Griffith, Jacqueli Logan and Madge Bellamy are the six charter members of Hollywood's latest organization.

Miss Bellamy, the Thomas H. Ince star, is the newest Texas arrival in the starry firmament.

Wisconsin Organization Shows Good Results

DURING the past year the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin have demonstrated as never before, the necessity for a close-knit harmonious organization to carry on the work of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners.

In spite of adverse conditions the organization has made wonderful progress.

It successfully fought in the court the first, as well as many other attempts, of the W.C.T.U. to close up the theatres on Sundays.

It successfully fought nine adverse legislative bills which included Censorship, Sunday Enforcement, Regulation of Admission prices, the S. R. O. Bill including State and City license, Tax and other pernicious measures.

All complaints between exhibitors and film companies have been satisfactorily adjusted which cases involved the actual return or adjustment of over $7000.00 in deposits and approximately $1500.00 in disputed claims, which are still unadjusted due to circumstances over which the Association has no control.

New Distributing Corp. Aid to Exhibitors

The Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation, launched in Chicago a few days ago, will prove a boon to the average motion picture exhibitor, according to the opinion of A. R. Pramer, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association of Nebraska and Iowa. Mr. Pramer attended the Chicago meeting with C. E. Williams, business manager of his organization.

"We are ready to go on a $5,000,000 basis," said Mr. Pramer. "Our association will give the exhibitors a more equitable chance on a variety of pictures. What I mean is, that the present monopoly enjoyed by the larger picture houses will be reduced. Under our plan, the smaller exhibitor will not be required to contract for a whole series of pictures in order to obtain what he wants. We have to meet the public who pay the freight. Our association will have 29 exchanges, one of which will be in Omaha. We will have a tie-up with the best directors."

Love Making Rule Stirs Ohio Exhibitors

Cincinnati exhibitors and exchange men expressed great surprise on hearing of the new ruling of the Ohio Board of Censors whereby all love-making of an illicit nature is to be tabooed from the screen. Many of them stated that they knew nothing at all about this latest decision and had heard no rumors about its being contemplated by the Board. They were practically unanimous in their assertion that since the organization of the Board some time ago pictures had been judged with the utmost fairness and tolerance.

Roy Haines, district manager of the Associated First National Pictures of Ohio, expressed doubt as to whether such drastic orders would be rigidly enforced in view of the fact that heretofore each picture has been judged on its individual merit rather than by a set standard.

W. C. Bachmeyer, district manager of Metro, expressed his confidence that the ruling could not possibly be put into effect without modification from time to time.

Picture Houses Destroyed in Astoria Fire

Every theatre in the city of Astoria, Oregon, was destroyed in the recent fire that razed the entire business district and caused a damage estimated at between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000 in the town of 20,000 population population.

The Blue Mouse, Liberty, and Star theatres, owned and operated in conjunction with the Blue Mouse circuit of Seattle, by John Hamrick, were entirely destroyed, with a loss of $100,000 fully covered by insurance. The Astoria theatre, a house devoted to legitimate stage productions, was also burned to the ground.

In less than a week after the fateful conflagration, the residents of Astoria were furnished with motion picture entertainment through the efforts of Mr. Hamrick, and B. H. Shearer Theatre Equipment Company of Seattle, and Arthur Hale, local representative and manager for the Blue Mouse circuit in the Oregon city.

"Hungry Hearts" Selected for Children's Program

The National Motion Picture League selected Goldwyn's "Hungry Hearts" from a carefully compiled list of suitable photoplays to show to children during its Better Motion Picture Week. The showing was held at the Children's theatre in the Heckscher Building, New York City, at 4 o'clock on last Saturday following a parade in which pictures of half a dozen or more producing concerns were represented by floats.

Assists the Small-Towner in Getting Results

THE small-town exhibitor realizes the value of exploitation. He also realizes that discretion must be used in the expenditure attendant an exploitation campaign when the population of his town is not very large and the seating capacity of his house rather small. Hundreds of small-town exhibitors have written us praising the BOOKING GUIDE because of its assistance in enabling them to follow the lead of other exhibitors in adapting their suggestions or in planning their campaigns.

E. W. Hoover of the Strand and Alhambra theatres, Knightstown, Indiana, writes in part: "Sure, BOOKING GUIDE is a help to the small town guy. I use it most every day with results. . . . Your reviewing service has improved wonderfully in the last year. Keep it up."

THE NEWS IS FILED THROUGHOUT THE FIELD.

Ban on Roscoe Arbuckle Is Lifted

Will Hays, Jesse Lasky and Joseph Schenck Issue Statements from Los Angeles

ACCORDING to an announcement from Los Angeles, by Will H. Hays, the ban on Roscoe Arbuckle is to be lifted. This is the gist of a series of statements given out Wednesday by Mr. Hays, Jesse Lasky and Joseph Schenck.

Mr. Hays last April requested the producers to withdraw the Arbuckle films and to make no more of them. He took that action after Arbuckle had been thrice tried on a charge of manslaughter arising from the death in San Francisco of Miss Virginia Rappe. Since then Arbuckle has lived quietly, taking an occasional trip away but keeping out of the public eye.

Mr. Hays announced Wednesday he saw no reason why Arbuckle should not be permitted to go back to work if he wished to do so. Mr. Hays said Arbuckle had been tried and acquitted; that he believed every man was entitled to a chance to redeem himself and that he did not wish to stand in Arbuckle's way. He made it plain that he neither sponsored Arbuckle's future nor his films, but that he was simply putting things into trim so the actor could work out his own future, unhampered by any restrictions from within the industry.

Arbuckle has declined to comment on the new conditions other than to say he would accept the chance and try to improve it. Neither would his employer, Mr. Schenck, comment on their plans. The only definite announcement in the matter other than that of Mr. Hays came from Mr. Lasky, who said his firm had no intention of putting existing Arbuckle films on the market now.

The statement of the case, as given out from the headquarters of Mr. Hays, said:

"Roscoe Arbuckle is to have another chance to go to work and make good, if he can. After the first of the year, he will be given this new opportunity.

"He has gone straight since he was barred from the films last April and he has pledged his word that he will keep on going straight. His conduct has satisfied Will H. Hays, adviser to the motion picture industry; Joseph M. Schenck, who will employ him, and the Paramount Company, represented by Jesse L. Lasky, which concern formerly distributed the comedies in which the fat fun-maker appeared.

"Every man in the right and at the proper time is entitled to his chance to make good. It is apparent that Roscoe Arbuckle's conduct since his trouble merits that chance. So far as I am concerned, there will be no suggestion now that he should not have his opportunity to go back to work in his profession.

"In our efforts to develop complete co-operation and confidence within the industry, I hope we can start the New Year with no yesterdays. Live and let live is not enough; we will try to live and help live.

"It became known that certain definite features figured in the action that will allow Arbuckle another opportunity to make good.

"First, perhaps, was the fact that he seems completely changed, and that his conduct since he was barred from the screen last April apparently has been exemplary.

"Then, too, the action was taken in the spirit of Christmas, and it was believed that the fullest co-operation in all branches of the motion picture industry would be best advanced by clearing the slate as far as possible.

"Again, it is known that Arbuckle never made a picture to which any exception possibly could be taken, and he never will.

"Still again, it was felt that, inasmuch as a jury acquitted him of the charges upon which he was tried, he is constitutionally entitled to the right of any citizen—especially the right of work at the only thing he knows how to work at.

"No plans are in contemplation for the release of the three comedies in which Arbuckle appeared before his trial."

Roscoe Arbuckle said:

"I want to say that I am very grateful to all those who are helping me, and I will prove myself worthy of their faith in me."

Joseph Schenck, producer, said:

"Roscoe will go to work for me. I am glad to help give him his chance."

Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, said:

"We are sure Arbuckle will prove worthy of the trust. No thought has been given to the matter of releasing the pictures already made, and we have no plans in this connection."

Wm. Beaudine Will Direct New Viola Dana Subject

William Beaudine has been engaged by Metro to direct Viola Dana in "Her Fatal Millions," a story by William Dudley Pelley. Its production is scheduled to begin this week.

"Her Fatal Millions" is a comedy-drama, adapted for the screen by Arthur Statter.

Will Hays Extends Christmas Greeting to Motion Picture Industry

CHRISTMAS of 1922 brings to me, and I am sure it brings to everyone in the Motion Picture industry a sense of joy born of the certain realization that we are working with each other in a great service to Mankind.

The motion picture has carried the silent call for virtue, honesty, ambition, patriotism, hope, love of country, and of home to audiences speaking twenty different languages, but all understanding the universal language of pictures; it has brought to narrow lives a knowledge of the wide, wide world; it has clothed the empty existence of far-off hamlets with joy; it has lifted listless laboring folk till they have walked the peaks of romance and adventure like their own Main Street, with laughing lips and healthy hearts; it has been the benefactor of uncounted millions.

To the men and women who are actually doing this great service of Motion Pictures I would voice the sincerest appreciation.

To every one in the industry I send Christmas greetings, and the earnest hope that their happiness may be as great as is my gratitude for their splendid cooperation.

WILL H. HAYS

"Catch My Smoke" Is Fox Release for Week

THE week of December 25 is marked by the release of only one Fox production, "Catch My Smoke," according to an announcement from the New York offices of the organization.

This picture stars Tom Mix, and was directed by William Beaudine.

It is the story of a young western rancher who after two years of service in the A. E. F., returns to his home only to find it in the possession of strange hands. His many trials in finally regaining his property and winning the beautiful young girl, takes him through a series of thrilling scenes.

First Nat'l Executive Committee Meeting Closes

The meeting of the executive committee of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., held in Los Angeles, was officially brought to a close on Thursday of last week, December 14th. Immediately following the adjournment, President Robert Lieber, Secretary-Treasurer H. O. Schwalbe, General Manager Richard A. Rowland, and Moe Mark left for New York.

Before officially terminating the conference, the First National officials issued the following statement:

"We have carefully gone over the entire production situation in Los Angeles, both with respect to our company and others. We have satisfied ourselves that Los Angeles is the logical production center of the universe and we have decided that the majority of our pictures will be made in this city.

"A great many independent stars, directors and producers have submitted propositions to us, many of which are under serious consideration and a few of which have already been accepted.

"We have decided, however, that we will not make any statement of our new acquisitions until we return to our home office in New York.

"The outlook for the future of our company, both from a distributing and exhibition standpoint, is exceedingly bright. We have lined up for our 1923-24 season the greatest number of box office attractions ever assembled under one company's banner.

"We want every independent star, director and producer to know and appreciate that Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has been and always will be, principally a distributing and exhibiting company and will always be receptive to making contractorial relations for high class film productions.

(Signed) "H. O. SCHWALBE."

Maryland Exhibitors Help with Auto Licenses

The Exhibitors' League of Maryland again has evidenced its desire to cooperate with city and state officials by agreeing to aid in a campaign being carried on by E. Austin Baughman, Maryland Motor Vehicle Commissioner, to get the public to obtain automobile licenses promptly and with as little inconvenience to owners of machines as possible.

The League was asked to suggest that exhibitors show on their screens slides telling the procedure to be followed in obtaining licenses and asking that the step be taken as soon as possible. Exhibitors throughout the state have promised their cooperation, and the slides are being prepared.

Service Exchange May Go to New Organization

The Exhibitors' Direct Service Exchange of St. Louis may be taken over by the $5,000,000 Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation, which was formed in Chicago last week.

Fred Wehrenberg, president of the St. Louis exchange, was one of the theatre men summoned to Chicago by Sidney Cohen and his association and with Joseph Mogler, president of the St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, agreed to take stock in the new company. Wehrenberg is vice president of the St. Louis league and owns the Cherokee and Melba theatres. Mogler has three houses, the Bremen, Excello and Mogler, all in North St. Louis.

The Exhibitors' Direct Service Exchange was formed by the owners of twenty-seven independent houses of St. Louis almost a year ago to bring about a reduction in the cost of their shows.

It is believed that a majority of the members of the Exhibitors' League will join the new company. The League members control about seventy-five of the 106 houses in St. Louis.

Censorship Amendment Loses in Missouri

The Constitutional Convention last week voted to reject the proposed amendment to the bill of rights which would have prohibited motion picture censorship legislation in Missouri. The convention sitting as a committee of the whole, tentatively adopted the free speech section of the bill of rights virtually as it appears in the present constitution. Film men of the state were hopeful to have the constitutional body eliminate for all time the repeated efforts of the "blue-nosed" reformers to force censorship on the state.

Walker Talks on Censors at Cleveland

Senator James J. Walker was the honor guest and speaker at the Cleveland City Club last Saturday. His subject was "Censorship —100 Per Cent Unamerican." Walker spoke with his usual force and made each point of his address stand out either by reason of an apt simile or by a well directed laugh. The Senator pointed out the inconsistency of picking on the movies for censorship, when all other methods of disseminating information is uncensored.

Twelve Best Pictures of the Year—and Why

Rudolph Valentino catches the true psychology of a man's vanity and passion in "Blood and Sand." Marion Davies brings a charming caprice and a wistful naivete to the figure of Mary Tudor, and Lyn Harding is a living Holbein as Henry the Eighth.

We could continue giving emphasis to the various notes found in these pictures and the excellent studies contributed to them. But other productions are crowding for attention. After paying our respects to the companies which produced the dandy dozen—to the stars and players and to the fine direction of such artists as Griffith, Frank Lloyd, Dwan, Robertson, Vidor, Ingram, Vignola, Franklin, Barker and Niblo—men of vision and ideas—we turn to the less great of the year.

Honorable mention must be given to this representative class, some of which are conspicuous for their box office values, others for noteworthy performances, while all possess qualities which spell entertainment. Included in this number are "Hungry Hearts" (Goldwyn), "The Eternal Flame" (First National), "The Ruling Passion" (United Artists), "East Is West" (First National), "Brothers Under the Skin" (Goldwyn), "Outcast," (Paramount), "The Cradle Buster" (American Releasing), "Fools First" (First National), "Shadows" (Lichtman), "The Trap" (Universal), "The Glory of Clementina" (F. B. O.), "The Little Minister" (Vitagraph), "The Sign of the Rose" (American Releasing), "The Stroke of Midnight" (Metro), "Forget-Me-Not" (Metro), "The Bachelor Daddy" (Paramount), "In the Name of the Law" (F. B. O.), "Just Tony" (Fox), "The Grey Dawn" (Hodkinson), "The Three Must-Get-Theres" (Allied Distributors), "Sonny" (First National).

Also "Oliver Twist" (First National), "Enter Madame" (Metro), "Rags to Riches" (Warner Bros.), "Quincy Adams Sawyer" (Metro), "Turn to the Right" (Metro), "The Town That God Forgot" (American Releasing), "Sherlock Holmes" (Goldwyn), "Our Leading Citizen" (Paramount), "Clarence" (Paramount), "Too Much Business" (Vitagraph), "The Old Homestead" (Paramount), "Trifling Women" (Metro), "Sky High" (Fox), "Minnie" (First National), "Reported Missing" (Selznick)), "A Real Adventure" (Associated Exhibitors), "Nice People" (Paramount), "To Have and to Hold" (Paramount), "Good Men and True," (Hodkinson), "Nero" (Fox), "A Front Page Story" (Vitagraph), "The Five Dollar Baby" (Metro), "The Man Who Played God" (United Artists), "Trouble" (First National), "One Week of Love" (Selznick), "Missing Husbands" (Metro), "The Good Provider" (Paramount), "Manslaughter" (Paramount), "My Wild Irish Rose" (Vitagraph), "If You Believe It, It's So" (Paramount), "Head Hunters of the South Seas" (Associated Exhibitors), "Silas Marner" (Associated Exhibitors), "The Masquerader" (First National), "Monte Cristo" (Fox), "The Toll of the Sea" (Metro), "Kick In" (Paramount), "Foolish Wives" (Universal), "The Hottentot" (First National), "The Loves of Pharoah" (Paramount), "Fascination" (Metro), and "Ebb Tide" (Paramount).

Suits Would Set Aside Knickerbocker Sale

Sale of the Knickerbocker theatre property last June would be set aside if the District Supreme Court concurs in the petition of attorneys for William J. Forsyth, Josephine T. Lyman and Mary Young. Mary Ann Forsyth and David Lyman were killed in the theatre disaster, while Miss Mary Young is a survivor. The petitioners also seek to compel an accounting by the company and Mr. Crandall, its former president of a loan of $150,000 made on the property by the National Savings and Trust Company.

The court was also asked to require the trust company to show how much of the money was turned over by it, to whom and how much remains in its hands. Attorneys Archer, Chamberlin and Smith, and Godfrey L. Munter filed for the three plaintiffs, separate suits on the law side of the court for $10,000 damages each, on account of the death of Miss Forsyth and Mr. Lyman, and for the personal injury suffered by Miss Young, the Knickerbocker Theatre Company being made defendant in all these suits.

Massachusetts Yeggs Rob Picture Houses

A "can-opener" cracksman with a decided penchant for motion picture theatres has been running wild in Massachusetts during the past week. He began his operations in Lynn Monday night, turned his attention to various towns and cities through the week, and finished the week by cracking the safe in a Boston house. To date the elusive yegg has seven theatres to his credit, with a total haul of $2.397.44.

Among the houses robbed and amounts taken were the following: Comique theatre, Lynn, $200; Strand theatre, Newburyport, $312.44; Palace theatre, Lawrence, $325; Broadway theatre, Lawrence, $450; Modern theatre, Lawrence, $300; Plaza theatre, Salem, $580; Dudley Street theatre, Boston, $250.

Operator Is Held for Theft of Funds

Following thefts of considerable sums from the office safe of the Avon theatre in Watertown, N. Y., Arthur Wells, a motion picture operator, was arrested last week in Watertown, and held for the grand jury.

During the absence of Charles Sesonske, it is alleged that Wells learned the combination of the safe, and took considerable sums from time to time. In order to reach the office, it is alleged, Wells was obliged to walk along a narrow ledge for some distance.

Watt Parker Joins Staff of Warner Bros.

WATT L. PARKER, for the past four years connected with the Select Pictures Corporation, most recently as Advertising Manager, has resigned to accept the position of advertising manager of Warner Brothers. He assumes his new duties Tuesday, December 26th.

Mr. Parker was a guest at an informal dinner given in his honor Thursday evening, December 21st, by a score or more of his associates, including members of the Select organization and others in the trade with whom Mr. Parker has been actively associated.

Paramount's Dec. 24th Releases

Meighan in "Back Home and Broke" and Ayres in "Daughter of Luxury"

THOMAS MEIGHAN in George Ade's "Back Home and Broke," and Agnes Ayres in "A Daughter of Luxury" are the features on the Paramount release schedule for December 24.

As in the case of "Our Leading Citizen," the author's first direct contribution to the screen, America's foremost humorist, George Ade, wrote "Back Home and Broke" expressly for Mr. Meighan. The scenario was written by J. Clarkson Miller, but most of the subtitles are the author's own. Alfred E. Green was the director.

The story of "Back Home and Broke" has for its theme the story of a young man who left home to find success in the West. The story has not only been vested with human interest and humor but has been given a novel twist. Usually the youth either returns home broke or not at all. One might judge from the title that the hero in this story came home broke, but there's where the surprise comes in.

It is said to have more well known small town characters crammed into it in true Ade style than most pictures of a more or less rural type. And it has a banquet, not the Broadway variety with professional dancers and cigarette-smoking women, but a small town banquet to celebrate the hero's homecoming to Bradford. Tom Redding, having proved himself a success in spite of the gloomy predictions of his townsmen, has invited all his friends and enemies to a feast, so that he may repay each according to his deserts. The assemblage includes the newly appointed chief of police, the town banker, the leading merchant, the friendly newsboy, the editor of the paper, the unofficial news gatherer, Aggie Twaddle; the fickle sweetheart and her new "crush," the factory foreman, and Tom's faithful sweetheart, Mary Thorne.

Lila Lee is Mr. Meighan's leading woman, and the supporting cast also includes Frederick Burton, Cyril Ring, Charles Abbe, Florence Dixon, Gertrude Quinlan, Richard Carlyle, Maude Turner Gordon, Laurence Wheat and Ned Burton.

Paul Powell directed the Agnes Ayres picture, "A Daughter of Luxury." The scenario was written by Beulah Marie Dix and is an adaptation of the stage play, "The Imposter," by Leonard Merrick and Michael Morton.

"The picture," says Paramount, "conveys no moral message, but it fulfills the prime purpose of any good picture—entertainment and amusement of its audience. The story has situations that might easily be interpreted as melodrama, but they are so handled as to keep them in the lighter vein."

The supporting cast is headed by Tom Gallery, leading man, and includes Edith Yorke, Howard Ralson, Edward Martindel, Sylvia Ashton, Clarence Burton, ZaSu Pitts, Robert Schable, Bernice Frank, Dorothy Gordon and Muriel MacCormic.

Private Screening of "Peg o' My Heart" in N. Y.

A private showing of Metro's screen version of "Peg o' My Heart" was held at the Hotel Astor, New York, December 10th. Laurette Taylor, the star of both the stage and the film production; J. Hartley Manners, author of the story, and a number of their friends were on hand for the screening. The picture was given an enthusiastic reception by the small but select audience.

Exploitation Stunt Brings Ban in Oswego, N. Y.

What seems to be poor judgment in the way of an attempt to exploit "The Outcast" in Oswego, N. Y., resulted in Mayor Neal issuing a statement that he would not tolerate any such sensational advertising as had characterized the exploitation of "The Outcast." The picture was finally cancelled by the Schine theatre. The whole trouble started when an exploitation man visited the city and left a suitcase on the river bank. In the case were some clothes, one or two photographs and a pathetic letter from a girl to her sweetheart, saying that she was an outcast and had decided to end it all.

No sooner was the suitcase discovered than the story of the supposed suicide spread over the city. The police spent some time trying to learn the identity of the supposed suicide, and later on discovered that they were the victims of exploitation and that a picture known as "The Outcast" had been booked at one of the motion picture theatres. The police took the matter up with the Mayor, with the result that the latter, in a statement, made it very plain that no such exploitation would be allowed in his city.

Conference of Governors Sees "Minnie"

Marshall Neilan's picture, "Minnie," a First National release, was shown to the governors in conference at White Sulphur Springs last week. They had much serious business to discuss at the conference, but Neilan's comedy drama helped to keep them in good humor.

An additional attraction for the governors was the fact that Miss Leatrice Joy was in White Sulphur Springs at the time. Leatrice and Matt Moore have the leading roles in "Minnie." She made what exhibitors would call a "personal appearance." The governors congratulated her on her fine work.

Alleged Embezzler Not with Educational Film

IN a letter addressed to Motion Picture News, Earl W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., requests that the trade be informed that Norman E. Cameron, charged with the embezzlement of $15,000 in alleged violation of the California Blue Law, is in no way connected with Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., or its subsidiary companies. Cameron has been quoted as president of an Educational Films Corporation. Mr. Hammons' statement follows:

"That before reading this article I never heard of this Norman E. Cameron, nor has he ever had any connection whatsoever with any of our companies or subsidiary companies. It is possible, as stated in some of these newspaper clippings, that he organized an Educational Films Company, but I never heard either of him or his company before reading this article."

Maxson R. Doolittle Dies in Minneapolis

Maxson R. Doolittle, former publicity director of the Criterion theatre, New York, and lately Paramount exploiteer at Minneapolis, died the afternoon of Friday, December 15th, at Minneapolis of complications following a siege of pneumonia.

The funeral was held Sunday in Eau Claire, Wisconsin, his birth place. He was thirty-one years old and is survived by his wife and mother.

Doolittle early in his film career acquired the Orpheum, Eau Claire, which he later sold to join Finkelstein and Rubin's art staff in the Twin Cities. Later he became associated with the regional staff of Goldwyn, and early in 1921 joined the Paramount exploitation staff at the Des Moines office. The same year he was made publicity director of the Criterion, New York, and later served as exploiteer at the Cleveland and Minneapolis offices.

Plan Eight New Lichtman Subjects

Exploitation Is Set for Four Forthcoming Releases; Chief Pleased at Results on Coast

AL LICHTMAN, president of the Al Lichtman Corporation, returned this week from the Coast with news of his organization's future production activities. During his three weeks' stay in California, Lichtman conferred with B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, on a production schedule that is due to keep the Gasnier and Forman producing units busy for some months to come. The plans discussed covered the making of eight new subjects, the titles of which are "Mothers-in-Law," "The Broken Wing," "The Parasite," "Frivolity," "The Aristocrat," "The Satin Woman," "My Lady's Lips" and "A Mansion of Aching Hearts."

Another accomplishment was the signing of Gaston Glass under a three-years' contract to appear as leading man in future productions of Preferred Pictures. Exploitation plans for the next four pictures were also mapped out. These four subjects are "The Hero," "Are You a Failure?" "Poor Men's Wives" and "The Girl Who Came Back." Olga Printzlau, for a long time on the Lasky staff of scenarists, has been secured to write the scenario for Gasnier's next production, titled "Mothers-in-Law." Mr. Lichtman also spoke enthusiastically of the studio developments put through by Schulberg and said he was most favorably impressed by the display of loyalty, enterprise and industry on the part of the production staff.

"I found my coast visit a profitable one," said Lichtman this week. "While there, Mr. Schulberg and I did some things that definitely place Preferred as a power to be reckoned with in the production field. I am going to state some plain facts that sound extravagant, I know, but mark my words well and time will show how true these words were.

"I predict that the next four releases of the Lichtman Corporation, namely 'The Hero,' 'Are You a Failure?' 'Poor Men's Wives' and 'The Girl Who Came Back,' will establish a new high level in the production annals of the business and will place Preferred in the first rank of producers. I saw two of them in the projection room and saw most of the other two shot in the studio. I know what I am talking about when I predict that they will make box-office history. Were it possible to draw the line any finer, I would say in all honesty that 'Poor Men's Wives' and 'The Girl Who Came Back' will hit new high levels. They are being produced with every deliberate effort to include sure-fire box office touches."

Theatres Offered for Showing of Postal Service

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has offered Postmaster General Work the free use of all the picture houses of the country belonging to his organization in presenting films to the public showing the operations of the postal service. In making his offer Mr. Cohen said:

"The Post Office Department intimately affects and is closely allied to the business and personal interests of the entire population of the United States and indirectly all the people of the world. For this reason we desire to extend the free use of the screen in the 12,000 theatres of our association. Carefully arranged films and slides can and will convey any message from the Post Office Department to the twenty million people who daily visit these motion picture theatres."

Universal Lists 12 "Jewel" Releases of 1923

Three Finished; Six in Production; Remainder in Scenarists' Hands; "Flirt" Heads List

ONE Universal-Jewel a month during the year 1923; that's the schedule laid down by Universal Pictures Corporation fror the release of its big productions during the coming year.

Three of these Universal-Jewel productions are already completed and will shortly be placed in the exchanges; six are now in various stages of production; and the remaining three are being translated into screen form by the scenario department at Universal City. Each of the twelve will be completed far enough ahead of release date to admit of thorough exploitation and special exhibitor service, declares a statement from the Universal home office announcing the twelve "Jewels." The Universal announcement follows:

"The first release for the New Year will be 'The Flirt,' directed by Hobart Henley. It was adapted by A. P. Younger from Booth Tarkington's well-known novel of American life by that name.

"The two leading roles are taken by Eileen Percy in the title role, and Helen Jerome Eddy as her unassuming sister. Others in the cast are George Nichols, Lloyd Whitlock, Edward Hearn, Dorothea Wolbert, Nell Craig, Buddy Messenger, Harold Goodwin, Bert Roach, Lydia Knott, William Welsh and Tom Kennedy.

"The February Jewel release will be 'The Flame of Life,' a new Priscilla Dean feature. It is a stirring picture of life and adventure in the Welsh coal mining district. It was adapted from a strong story by Frances Hodgson Burnett, the popular novelist.

"'The Flame of Life' is another Hobart Henley production. Elliott J. Clawson adapted it for the screen, and Virgil Miller filmed it. The big thrill of the feature is a coal mine disaster which has been characterized by survivors of actual underground holocausts as the most startling and accurate reproduction ever made.

"A strong cast supports Miss Dean in this special. Robert Ellis is her leading man, and the chief heavy role is played by Wallace Beery. Others in the cast are Kathryn McGuire, Beatrice Burnham, Fred Kohler, Emmet King, Grace DeGarro, Evelyn McCoy, Richard Daniels and Nancy Caswell. Henley is said to have reproduced the atmosphere of the English coal mining districts with remarkable fidelity. The picture will be released February 5.

"The March release will be a Universal-Jewel starring Lon Chaney. It is called 'The Shock,' and is a powerful screen adaptation by Charles Kenyon from a story by William Dudley Pelley. 'The Shock' is laid in the San Francisco underworld and shows the regeneration of a deformed underworld character through the love of a pure woman. The picture comes to a vivid and terrifying climax with the San Francisco earthquake and fire.

"Virginia Valli, a Universal star in her own right, supports Chaney in 'The Shock.' Others in the cast include Christine Mayo, Jack Mower, William Welsh, Walter Long, Henry Barrows, James Wong and a score of other nationally known players. The feature will be released March 5.

"Universal's super feature for April will be a screen adaptation of Jack London's powerful story, 'The Abysmal Brute.' It stars Reginald Denny, with Mabel Julienne Scott in the leading supporting role. It is another Hobart Henley production.

"Reginald Denny was chosen to interpret London's cave-man character because of his popularity as the hero of 'The Leather Pushers' series, the celebrated H. C. Witwer prize ring stories filmed by Universal. The company, now in the Big Bear valley of California, is putting Denny through a rigorous course of training under winter conditions. 'The Abysmal Brute' will be released April 2.

"In May, Universal will release another Priscilla Dean Jewel. It is 'White Tiger,' written and directed by Tod Browning. This picture will present Miss Dean in one of her 'adorable crook' roles. It was written especially for her by Browning.

"Wallace Beery again plays the heavy opposite Miss Dean. Ray Griffith and Matt Moore also are to be seen opposite the star, Moore as the leading man and Griffith in an intricate role as the star's brother. The picture is a crook story laid in New York and London. In order to obtain certain sequences Browning brought his company all the way from Los Angeles to New York for several weeks' work. May 7 has been set as the release date for this feature.

"'The Attic of Felix Bavu,' a striking screen adaptation of Earl Carroll's spectacular play, is scheduled for June release by Universal. It is said to be one of the most unusual stories ever screened. It deals with a mixture of romance and adventure in Soviet Russia. Stuart Paton is making this feature.

"A strong cast, headed by Wallace Beery as the chief villain, now is engaged at Universal City in its production. He takes the role of 'Bavu,' a part which is said to tax his proven ability as a remarkable character actor. Forrest Stanley, Estelle Taylor, Sylvia Breamer, Martha Mattox, Joseph Spickard, Harry Carter, Jack Rollens and Nick de Ruiz also have important roles. This feature was prepared for the screen by Albert G. Kenyon. It will be ready for release June 4.

"For July release, Lois Weber has returned to Universal City and is making a superproduction of 'Jewel,' the popular novel by Clara Louise Burnham. Eight years ago Miss Weber made this as a Bluebird picture for Universal. It was a big success. Today, with modern directorial and photographic methods, Universal expects it to be one of the big hits of the year.

"Production already has been started on it. Miss Weber is assisted by Arthur Forde. Ben Reynolds, who filmed 'Foolish Wives,' is her camera-man. The cast includes Jane Mishkinin, a 10-year-old 'discovery'; Claude Gillingwater, Robert Frazer, Jacqueline Gadsden, Ernest Yeardsley, Beth Raynon, Frances Raymond and Eva Thatcher. Unusual color photography is being projected for this feature, as well as many new and novel camera effects. It will be placed in the hands of exhibitors July 2.

"August will see another Priscilla Dean Jewel. It will be 'Drifting,' adapted from John Colton's popular play, produced in New York by William A. Brady with his daughter, Alice Brady, as the star. Tod Browning is directing the Universal screen version of 'Drifting' from a continuity by Lucien Hubbard. The picture is laid in China and will have all the exotic atmosphere of the Far East, it is promised. Matt Moore will be Miss Dean's leading man in this Jewel. The picture will be released August 6.

"September will see the release of 'Merry-Go-Round,' the Erich von Stroheim successor of 'Foolish Wives' and which Rupert Julian is completing after von Stroheim's break with Universal. The story, credited to von Stroheim, is laid in Vienna before, during and after the World War. It is said to be a remarkable reproduction of the life and gayety of that famous pleasure mart and to portray the social break down which followed the war.

"The leading roles are taken by Norman Kerry, Mary Philbin, Wallace Beery, Maude George and others. Dale Fuller, Spottiswoode Aitken, Al Edmundson, Cæsar Gravina, Colonel Waverka and Captain Conti, two Austrian officers; Earl Talbot, Fay Holderness and George Hackathorne are also in the cast. Many Viennese streets are being reproduced at Universal City for the filming. It will be released September 3.

"Universal's October release will be 'Up the Ladder,' starring Virginia Valli. It has been adapted from the stage play by Owen Davis. Hobart Henley may direct it, if he completes 'The Abysmal Brute' in time to get it ready. A strong cast is promised in support of Miss Valli for this feature. 'Up the Ladder' will hit the screen on October 1.

"The following month Universal will release 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame,' an adaptation of Victor Hugo's world-famed novel, 'Notre Dame de Paris.' It is now in production under the direction of Wallace Worsley, who was chosen because he played for many years in the stage version of the celebrated story.

"This Jewel is being made with a special all-star cast, including Lon Chaney, Raymond Hatton and Patsy Ruth Miller. E. T. Lowe, Jr., and Perley Poore Sheehan recently finished putting the novel into continuity form.

"Chaney as the Hunchback will have the supreme part of his screen career, it is said Present indications promise that it will be more gorgeous even than 'Foolish Wives' and more dynamic than 'The Storm.' It will reach the screen on November 5.

"The last Universal-Jewel production to be released in 1923 will be a Priscilla Dean special adapted from Frances Hodgson Burnett's famous novel and play, 'A Lady of Quality.' No director has been chosen for this picture, as it will be several months before Miss Dean can start work upon it. She will play the role made popular on the stage by Julia Arthur. This Jewel will be released December 3."

Around the Trade

INDUSTRY continues to pick up, and, according to reports from all parts of the central west, employment conditions are better than at any time since the slump appeared two years ago, and motion picture theatre owners believe that this spells increasing prosperity for the moving picture business.

The come-back of business and industry has reached the point where it is hampered in many centers by inadequate rail facilities and in many places there is also a labor shortage, despite cold weather, that is sending some transient workers into the cities. The tendency of wages is still upwards.

Barney Cohen, district manager of the Federal Employment Service, states that industrial employment in Illinois is better than at any time in the past two years, and the Illinois Department of Labor, in its surveys, shows that one thousand, four hundred and nine-two plants increased forces two per cent. in November, while pay rolls increased four per cent.

In the Chicago industrial district, reports show that industry and employment are increasing. Wire and alloy steel plants are operating at capacity. Manufacturing and building lines are active, and increased shipments to the stock yards have resulted in the employment of more men. Steel mills are operating at eighty per cent. of capacity and construction activities in Illinois did not close with cold weather and work is going ahead more extensively than in former years. In Indiana industry is humming; Michigan is breaking all employment records, and from Milwaukee come reports of an increase in employment in practically all lines.

Chicago retailers also report the Christmas buying has surpassed all past records, both as to volume and value of merchandise.

While Adolph Bolm is busy with his Chicago opera season, Jones, Linick & Schaefer have secured the services of Boris Petroff, as director of the dance, which forms an important portion of each week's entertainment at the new McVicker's theatre. ---

Twenty-five thousand orphans, destitute children, grown-ups from various institutions and convalescing soldiers, were the guests of Balaban & Katz, at their various, big theatres during the two weeks preceding Christmas. They were conveyed to the theatres in street cars, automobiles, supplied by volunteer organizations, buses, and every means of transportation, and were admitted free and given a real bit of Christmas cheer through the generosity of Chicago's famous showmen. Many others of the leading circuits and individual theatres also displayed the Christmas spirit and added to the happiness of the city in various ways, among them being Lubliner & Trinz, who entertained thousands of children from charitable institutions in their seventeen theatres, and Ascher Brothers, who did likewise. Brunhild & Young who, for five consecutive years have distributed toys to every child attending one of their four houses on the day before Christmas including children in arms, did so again this year and the gifts that Santy distributed were worth while and brought pleasure to the youngsters.

Exhibitors' Reports on Pictures

NOTE:—Exhibitors' Reports on Pictures is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features. This department is presented this month in a new and enlarged form, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see even more closely what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who considered it "Fair"; the third column, the number who considered it "Average"; the fourth, the number who considered it "Good"; and the fifth column, those who considered it "Big."

The last column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Average," 50%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

| Title of Picture | Number Exhibitors Reporting "Poor" | Number Exhibitors Reporting "Fair" | Number Exhibitors Reporting "Average" | Number Exhibitors Reporting "Good" | Number Exhibitors Reporting "Big" | Average Percentage Value |

Will Rogers says;

"A great many so-called wise guys have said, 'Isn't it kinder goin' back to go from five reels to two?' I say No, not when you can tell the same story in two reels. I made 14 two-reel pictures which were released in five. I'd rather have the credit of making a split reel if it was any good than to make the longest picture ever made."

"Fruits of Faith"

Three Parts

"In 'Fruits of Faith' to be sure of some natural acting we have a baby and a donkey, with which no actor can compete on the screen.

The reason why I made a three-reeler and one of the reasons why they'll like it is because it can only be 3-5ths as bad as a feature."

Some Master Craftsmen of the Fading Year

WITH the New Year will come new pictures, players, scenarists, cinematographers, who will ultimately claim their places, just as those who now stand as acknowledged leaders, gained their enviable positions in the several branches of the motion picture profession.

Making individual success in one's chosen profession is largely a matter of making success a goal, refusing to accept less. Living object lessons lend toward making such argument more convincing and fortunately, there are those among motion picture artists who have commanded recognition via that route, assisted by serious personal application. In order to imitate the successful it becomes necessary to imitate, also, the efforts of such examples of achievement as occupy the limelight, who did not enjoy altogether easy sailing while becoming leading directors, or stars, or at the top of the ladder in any particular branch of the work.

The year of 1922 has seen some splendid photoplays, and among the best of these is Mary Pickford in "Tess of the Storm Country," directed by John S. Robertson. It was a foregone conclusion that the reproduction of one of Miss Pickford's early successes would be a tremendous triumph. But it was scarcely believed that even Mary Pickford, directed by John S. Robertson, would achieve anything like the charming accomplishment delivered in the finished product. Mr. Robertson's previous successes, including "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," with John Barrymore; "Footlights," with Elsie Ferguson, and "Sentimental Tommy," with May McAvoy and Gareth Hughes, were marked sufficiently to entitle him to directorial honors, suggesting, also, that he was one of only a few directors who might be trusted with the reproduction of "Tess of the Storm Country," with the eyes of the world upon him.

JOHN S. ROBERTSON has achieved striking success with his public and favor with screen critics, as a direct result of "character building" in his screen players rather than resorting to sudden changes with swift moving action developments. He has other ideas, too, each decidedly individual, and in connection with his recent move in signing with Inspiration, to direct Charles Duell's stars, Richard Barthelmess, Lillian and Dorothy Gish, the director will have a charter as free as the wind upon which to base his future directorial activities.

Directors who achieve fame are usually obliged to apply themselves diligently. We are not unfamiliar with the "over night star," but where is "an over night director?"

THE efforts of Robert G. Vignola to become a leading director, dates back to the old Kalem days. His success is founded upon the slow process of building a reputation, step by step. Pictures he has made for Cosmopolitan Productions mark results of his persistency as well as his consistency. "The World and His Wife," "Straight Is the Way," "The Woman God Changed," "Enchantment," and his work in connection with "The Young Diana" laid the foundation for his great triumph "When Knighthood was in Flower." With so perfect a picture meeting with approval everywhere, it is not surprising that he has accorded himself a six months' vacation, which he is at present spending abroad.

TOM FORMAN is a director who can look back upon the old year with pride, and look hopefully toward the future. His picture "Shadows" was unanimously acclaimed as an artistic achievement and his reputation as a splendid actor indicates his ability to become even more expert in the kindred art of directing. Among pictures directed by Mr. Forman previous to his affiliation with the Al Lichtman Corporation, were "If You Believe It, It's So," with Thomas Meighan; "White Shoulders," with Katherine MacDonald; also, "Money, Money, Money," and a number of other successful productions. His more recent efforts include "Are You a Failure?" He has lately completed "The Girl Who Came Back," and will begin on "The Broken Wing" (as soon as the working continuity is ready), a Tom Forman Production, for distribution by Al Lichtman Corporation.

THE American director and scenarist, Denison Clift, is still in England. It is only necessary to refer to his recent achievements to illustrate his progress during the past two years he has spent abroad. His first production over seas was "The Diamond Necklace," followed by "Demos." It was of great interest to his friends and former associates to see "A Woman of No Importance," when it was booked over the United States. Then came "Sonia," "The Old Wives' Tale," "Bentley's Conscience," "Diana of the Crossways" and more recently, "A Bill of Divorcement," about which a picture critic of the London Daily Graphic says: "There are two things to be said of this Ideal production—it is the best English photoplay that has ever heen made, and is the first photoplay I have seen which is of greater appeal than the stage play on the same subject."

At present Director Clift is husily engaged in producing "This Freedom," to he followed by "Out to Win." A super production, "Mary, Queen of Scots," is also in the offing, described in advance as "an enthralling story to he set amidst the great old castles of England and Scotland, to he directed by Denison Clift."

Another director whose career beginning as a short story writer, carried him into prominence as an American director and holds fast while he spends his time abroad directing pictures for the Ideal Films, Ltd.

Scene from "The Flirt," the Universal-Jewel production, directed by Hobart Henley, adapted from Booth Tarkington's novel of the same title

AMONG the newcomers making rapid strides toward directorial fame is Mal St. Clair, who became a director after he had won a place for himself as one of the leading cartoonists in the West. He made the first five comedies for F. B. O., starring Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven, and attracted sufficient attention as to be selected by P. A. Powers to direct George O'Hara in a new "Fighting Blood" series. These will be adapted from stories widely read and justly famous, from the pen of H. C. Witwer, made in two reels. "Fighting Blood" is also the main title of the first of a group of twelve, at present being prepared, also for release through Film Booking Offices of America.

William A. Seiter has enjoyed a prosperous year, but judging from the favorable reception accorded his picture for Warner Brothers, "The Beautiful and Damned," may look forward to another busy one. It was Director Seiter, also, who made "The Little Church Around the Corner" for Warner Brothers and he is at present engaged in directing Madge Bellamy in "The Tinsel Harvest" for Regal-Pictures, Inc.

THE beginning of the new year will see the inauguration of a period of expansion and activity for the Hunt Stromherg Productions, with efforts centered on the production of the Bull Montana comedies for Metro release at the present time.

Although one of the youngest producing organizations in Hollywood, the Hunt Stromherg Productions have already been firmly established as a very definite factor in the industry.

Because of his intimate touch with the public and the exhibitors of America during the time Hunt Stromberg was in charge of the publicity departments of several of the industry's largest companies, he brought to the producing of pictures a freshness of ideas and ideals that have already found commendable expression.

Following a period of close association with Thomas H. Ince, Mr. Stromberg resigned to make a noteworthy advent in the ranks of producers with Doris May as his star. "The Foolish Age" the young producer wrote and directed himself.

"A Ladies' Man" firmly established Bull Montana as a comedy star and at the same time substantiated Mr. Stromberg's judgment. "A Punctured Prince," the second Montana release, was as great a success as the initial offering.

The most ambitious effort of the Bull Montana series to date directed by Hunt Stromberg is "Rob 'Em Good," a hilarious burlesque of the Douglas Fairbanks feature.

"Glad Rags," an early release, is an adaptation by Hunt Stromberg of the magazine story, "Silk Purses and Cauliflower Ears," hy Rene Revierre, and offers "the caveman comedian" the appealing role of Frisco Flash.

Actual production on the fifth Stromberg-Montana comedy, "They Call It Dancing," is now taking place at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

SOME of the critics, reviewing the most recent work of Charles Ray, particularly his fine United Artists' production, "A Tailor-Made Man," have spoken of his having "come back." As a matter of fact Ray, with the exception of one or two slips in his progress—a not unusual event in the life of all stars—has not been "away." He has gone forward in his art with steady progress.

There is not to the credit of any star a more varied lot of roles well done than his, and no artist has spanned with more general esteem the whole range of impersonation from the tragic, as in "The Coward," which lifted him to fame, down through the melodramatic, as in "Scrap Iron"; the broadly humorous, as in "Alias Julias Caesar," to the subtlest high comedy, as in portions of "A Tailor-Made Man."

Next he shifts in his second United Artists' picture to the most passionate romance as he depicts James Whitcomb Riley's own love story in "The Girl I Loved," which is to be released in February or March. Now he turns to the most ambitious work of his career, a big-sweep historical drama of the Pilgrim Fathers, based upon Longfellow's epic narrative in verse, "The Courtship of Myles Standish," himself portraying John Alden in the first American love story and the most popularly idealized in our history.

Mr. Ray's research department has found a wealth of highly dramatic material in the adventures of the Pilgrims, and begins his story in mid-Atlantic during the famous voyage which ended at Plymouth Rock, only to take up a new phase of exciting events.

Mr. Ray has picked his ideal director for "The Courtship of Myles Standish" in Frederic Sullivan, who has proved his mettle in handling large masses of people in spectacular outdoor productions of "Midsummer Night's Dream" in St. Louis, Boston, Washington, Chicago and other cities. Mr. Sullivan is a nephew of Sir Arthur Sullivan, England's great composer. On the stage he has been actor and producer, and his experience in pictures dates back to the old Reliance, the first company to have a studio in the east.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS is one of those screen stars who, by her serious regard for her work, has mapped out a busy time for herself and established a precedent that requires constant effort to live up to. Her success in "Hurricane's Gal" was her triumph in 1922, although she was much in evidence in connection with other photoplays in which she starred. Therefore it is not surprising that "The White Frontier," now being made to serve as a starring vehicle for Miss Phillips, is creating a goodly amount of interest, and exacting expectations, which, however, the star is perfectly capable of gratifying. She enjoys popularity of which she may well be proud, for she has earned it by gradually manifesting a previously unrecognized talent, in each succeeding picture.

WHEN the serial, "Speed," was announced as one in which Charles Hutchinson would star, those familiar with his work declared he was just the "speedy" artist who could personify the role. He had won merited laurels for his splendid work in previous serials, including "The Double Adventure," "Hurricane Hutch" and "Go Get 'Em Hutch." Anyone who has seen a single episode of any of the above chapter plays will agree that Charles Hutchinson is entitled to his popularity and identity as perhaps the most daring motion picture star in his field. It is hoped, in his sojourn abroad, he will not encounter any of the hazardous situations he meets in his work. But should he do so in reality, it is safe to say the athlete-actor will not be found wanting in finding his way to a safe return.

THOMAS MEIGHAN remains as a star ever entitled to the distinction. In the past twelve months his entire list of pictures come under the head of the year's successes, and it is doubtful if there is another masculine star with so long a list of altogether satisfactory characterizations to his credit. If he chose to do so, it would take him years to become forgotten as "The Bachelor Daddy," or lose his identity as "The Man Who Saw Tomorrow." Long will he be remembered in "If You Believe It, It's So," "Our Leading Citizen," "Manslaughter" and pictures previous to these in which he scored an individual success.

In "Back Home and Broke" he has maintained his consistent ability to thoroughly characterize a role, and his first picture for the New Year is promising, "The Ne'er Do Well," from the story by Rex Beach about just such a regular fellow as is Thomas Meighan himself.

WITH his busiest year now well behind him, E. K. Lincoln, popular screen star and leading man (and also "a man with a hundred varied interests"), looks forward to 1923 as even more interesting, because he may step out of the familiar role of actor and become a producer of motion pictures "on his own."

The year that is closing found Mr. Lincoln in the studios with various directors and stars at work on such productions as "Women Men Marry," "Devotion," "The Light in the Dark," "The Woman in Chains" and "The Little Red Schoolhouse," representing a full year.

It is known, however, that production activities have been calling E. K. Lincoln more insistently of late, and it will not come as a surprise when announcement of his joining the ranks of the producers is made.

E. K. Lincoln is also the owner of Greenacre Kennels, near Fairfield, Conn., where there are housed more than one hundred and fifty prize canines, including more than a hundred Chows, to say nothing of numerous blooded Pekinese, Japanese Spaniels and Boston Bulls.

Heading the list is Champion Greenacre Li Ping Tow, an unbeaten champion, a great red Chow with a lion like mane.

The master of Greenacre, the son of a Western business man, made his first appearance on the stage in a stock company. He ventured into the steel business, but became interested in motion pictures, joined Vitagraph, being starred or co-starred in several photoplays, including "A Million Bid," the first of Vitagraph's big features.

He has gone right on successfully alternating business deals with motion picture work, meanwhile breeding prize winning Chows.

ESTELLE TAYLOR has traveled rapidly toward stardom since her early days at Fox. One of the first pictures wherein she scored heavily was "While New York Sleeps,"

Grace Darmond in a scene from "The Wheel of Fortune," to be released through Anchor and interest in her progress revived perceptibly when she appeared in a difficult role in "Footfalls." However, from the many pictures she did under the Fox banner perhaps her greatest triumph was the role of the vampire in "A Fool There Was." She was widely acclaimed also when she was seen opposite John Gilbert in "Monte Cristo." Recently she has appeared in varied roles, illustrating her acknowledged versatility, and at present is engaged for a prominent role in the Universal attraction, "The Attic of Felix Bavu."

JOHNNY HINES danced his way to honors in years gone by, and claimed more as the star of "Torchy Comedies," but not until 1922 did it become generally known that he could also deliver a splendid characterization. His starring vehicle, "Sure Fire Flint," spread the good word. He may not have surprised everybody, but it is safe to assert that he startled many into a recognition of his histrionic ability, apparently in reserve.

"Sure Fire Flint" was deserving of the title—and in the title role Johnny Hines was "sure fire." It is predicted, upon the strength thereof, that his new picture, "Luck," will be "lucky" for all concerned if it is on a par with his first feature production, a 1922 surprise.

A MOTION PICTURE player can have no greater recommendation than a list of successful productions, one after the other, in which that player's name figures prominently. By way of illustration, Fritzi Ridgeway, who has scored individually in such productions as "The Old Homestead," "The Abysmal Brute," "His Good Name" and in "The Branded Man." Miss Ridgeway is a favorite player of long standing, who came out of the far west and has devoted time and effort to her work, which possibly explains one of the reasons why she is in demand for new pictures, and has earned her success in those of the past.

KENNETH HARLAN, one of the most popular leading men of the screen, has anchored for the beginning of the new year at least, having been signed by Preferred Pictures Corporation to appear in the Tom Forman production, "The Broken Wing," following his success in the leading male role of "The Girl Who Came Back." He was long identified with productions starring Norma and Constance Talmadge, and by reason of his splendid work remains a popular leading man, whose name in a cast meets with hearty welcome.

ONE branch of the profession, and one of great importance, has enjoyed great development during the past twelve months that stands as perpetual praise to those clever cinematographers who have brought improved motion picture photography to the fore, such as Henry Cronjager.

Everyone who saw a picture of some time ago, "The River's End," should remember who was responsible for the expert photography and credit Henry Cronjager, among the foremost cinematographers of the industry.

His artistry was repeated when he photographed Richard Barthelmess' successes of 1922, "Tol'able David" and "Sonny," and it is said that among the most worthy specimens of his work is one recently completed, "Back Home and Broke," starring Thomas Meighan.

These clever men are due for increased recognition during the years to come. A good camera man might make a picture without a director, but what kind of a picture could a director make—without a camera man?

Hodkinson Corporation in New York, has arrived in Buffalo to assume the office of sales manager of the Buffalo Associated Exhibitors office in the Pathe exchange, succeeding J. D. Mooney, who has resigned to accept a position with an independent exchange in Cleveland.

Basil Brady, salesman de luxe, and Louis Schindler, cashier extraordinary, of the Pathe exchange, are in New York to spend the Christmas holidays with their parents. The population of the town is about 29.

Kansas City's Film Row News

THE Kansas City Goldwyn branch office had a lively time this week in a "tit-for-tat" set-to with the press. Last week three of the Goldwyn force went to the county courthouse and paid an incorporation fee of $2.50 for the formation of an organization to be known as "Brothers Under the Skin." The Kansas City Star-Times and Journal-Post grabbed hook, sinker and line and, innocent of the real purpose of the "organization," believing it to be a bona fide movement against the dominant wave of feminism, the stories were played up under top heads on the front pages.

Great! thought the Goldwyn force.

You'll pay for this, warned the humiliated city editors.

Then came Sunday with its usual page of reviews on the pictures for the current week. Large advertisements were carried on the picture, "Brothers Under the Skin," but behold, the name of the production was not even mentioned in the review of one paper, the comedy on the program having been featured in a two-inch review, while scarcely more than two inches was given the production in its review in the other paper.

But a motor car parade, with banners aplenty, more than made up for the journalistic revenge.

E. C. Rhoden, manager of the Kansas City First National exchange, whose condition was dangerous recently, has successfully been operated upon for appendicitis and is expected to be able to leave the hospital soon.

Paul de Outo, Kansas City Universal salesman, soon will become manager of Universal's Havana exchange. Mr. de Outo recently was transferred to Universal's foreign department, having been assigned to Cuba.

A fire station only a few blocks away prevented serious damage to the Kansas City First National exchange last week. Fire, which started from some undetermined origin in a vacant lot next to the exchange, was extinguished before much damage was done.

were instructed to quickly open the side exits, while Mr. Steele calmly walked upon the platform and said:

"I am sorry, folks, but we will have to stop the show. You are requested to use the side and rear exits in leaving the house. There is imminent danger but do not be alarmed."

It was not until every person was out of the theatre that the audience saw the smoke coming from the house and realized that the building was on fire. The blaze soon was extinguished and the loss was estimated at $8,000, including damage to another building adjoining.

On application of J. C. Hartman and E. P. McClure, Judge Nelson E. Johnson of the circuit court of Kansas City, Wednesday appointed W. F. Zumbrunn, a lawyer, receiver for the Elliott Theatre Enterprise Corporation. McClure and Hartman, both officers of the organization, alleged that Elliott, president, is mismanaging business and that he is taking full charge and forbids their having a voice in the corporation. They allege that their salary of $100 a week has not been paid since the corporation was organized, July 5, 1922. The concern has a capital stock of $200,000.

Suit for $20,000 was brought against the Kansas City Gas Company in the circuit court this week by the Ridge Estate Company as a result of the explosion and fire which virtually wrecked the Doric theatre last week. Negligence on the part of the gas company in permitting gas to escape in large quantities is charged in the petition. No suit has been filed up to time of writing by owners of the Doric theatre, which was badly damaged by the explosion.

Twelve music tax cases are pending in Kansas City against exhibitors. The complaints, filed by the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, charge that the exhibitors entered into contract for three years, paid the first year, but have refused to pay since then. The defense of the exhibitors in the case, which was heard before Justice Edward J. McMahon, was left to Edward Costello, owner of the Bijou theatre, who was represented by Lawrence E. Goldman, counsel for the M. P. T. O. Missouri. There were two introduced: "First, that the musical instrument at the Bijou was placed on the outside of the theatre and used for ballyhoo purposes; and second, that the contract sued on was executed under threat of federal suit for infringement. The case was taken under advisement.

The M. P. T. O. Kansas headquarters was changed last week without changing its address, 109 West Eighteenth street, by moving to the second floor of the building and sharing floor space with the Hodkinson branch.

Eastern New York Notes

It is expected that a city ordinance will soon be passed in Troy which will bring some financial relief to owners of theatres in that city, who have been called upon for years past to pay for firemen stationed in the houses. Each fireman drew $21 a week from the house, and when one stops and considers that some of the houses paid for two and three such men the item becomes considerable. It is now proposed to tax each house an annual fee for maintaining the firemen. Houses seating 1,500 persons or more will pay $1,000; houses seating from 50 to 1,500 will pay $500, while smaller houses will pay $200.

Despite the approach of the holidays business was uniformly good in Albany, Troy and Schenectady this past week. At the Griswold in Troy last Sunday "Clarence" did the biggest Sunday business of the entire fall.

Although Sunday movies will prevail in Ballston Spa, N. Y., following last week's referendum vote, it is now said that the matter will go to an election again next spring and that it will be a paramount issue.

The Graylin theatre, in Gouverneur, is being redecorated these days, and will be opened by Harry Papayanokos the forepart of January.

The Castle theatre in Norwood, N. Y., was completely destroyed by fire last week, with a loss of $10,000, partially covered by insurance. The house is owned by William Greig.

The Avon in Watertown had an "old clothes matinee" this week in connection with "Oliver Twist." Every child who brought a bundle of old clothes was admitted free. The clothes were turned over to the Salvation Army.

In Washington's Film Center

THE F-I-L-M Board of the Washington field is gradually beginning to function. An executive board meeting is to be held Monday, the 18th of December, at which plans for the exhibitors and exchange January get-together will be discussed and some more definite action taken.

Manager Louis Reichert of the Select exchange recently returned to the city following a serious illness from which he has not fully recovered.

The all-star revival this week at the Crandall Joy of Paramount and First National stars is creating some comment in the local film row.

So successful was Progress Pictures presentation of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" that Manager Jerry Marks rented the film the second week to Sidney Lust of the Leader, who is also a state's right exchange owner. Business on it must be reviving when the Leader can run a picture like that for two weeks straight.

From the Vancouver exchange of Famous-Players Canadian Company Regal Films, at 553 Granville Street, comes the new Washington manager of Hodkinson Films, George A. Falkner, replacing Mr. Galanty. Mr. Falkner was at one time with the Toronto exchange of Regal Films, Ltd.

Albany's Film Row News

THE Albany Film Board of Trade has just sent out a letter to exhibitors, asking them to be more punctual and ship all film on time. Some exhibitors, as well as exchanges, have been greatly inconvenienced through neglect on the part of other exhibitors to handle the films promptly, it is declared.

Up to the present time theatres in Albany have encountered no difficulty in securing coal. Some of the exchanges, however, are protesting over being forced to use buckwheat coal.

Goldwyn opened up offices in Albany on December 18, with Charles Walders in charge. Gilbert Becker, who was with Select, has swung over to Goldwyn.

Harry Bernstein, of Buffalo, who took the place of M. A. Chase in handling Universal's territory, was in Albany this week becoming acquainted with the city.

Henry E. Wilkinson, former manager of Select's Albany office, now closed, is to remain in Albany as a sort of resident manager for the company, although shipping is to be done from the New York and Buffalo offices.

Vic Bendell, who has been associated with Goldwyn out of Albany, N. Y., for the last eight years, has transferred his affections to the F. B. O. and will cover the same territory.

In Charlotte's Film Center

J. U. M'CORMICK, Charlotte manager for Select, announces the closing of the Charlotte office on December 16. Mr. McCormick, however, will remain in the Carolina territory, handling both Washington and Atlanta towns in the Carolinas, with headquarters in Charlotte.

Harry Filkins, of the Rialto in Ticonderoga, is making a name for himself these days in the clever way he is exploiting pictures shown at his house.

C. W. Reese, of Clayton, N. Y., was fined the sum of $1 in Federal court at Utica this week after making answer to an indictment charging the falsifying of returns in theatre taxes. Mr. Reese claimed that he had simply made out the report in wrong form and had no intention of cheating the government.

News of the Carolinas

Influenza is abroad in the Carolinas again. The grim monster that strewed consternation and death in 1918 is manifesting himself in a virulent form in many cities at present. It is reported that both Statesville and High Point have been closed—that is, all theatres and churches—on account of the prevalence in these towns of the malady.

The Academy theatre, Charlotte, N. C., burned to the ground Sunday morning, December 17, the entire building being in ruins, even the walls crumbling. The cause has not been ascertained. It was a Southern Enterprise house, playing a combination vaudeville and picture program. It has not been announced whether or not they will rebuild.

Charlotte was the mecca for countless Carolina exhibitors the past week, the event being the annual ceremonial of Oasis Temple, Mystic Shrine, many of the exhibitors crossing the burning sands for the first time, while older brothers from all over the state looked on. A majority of the Carolina exhibitors are Shriners and these annual events always bring a large crowd to the film center of the Carolinas.

H. H. Anderson, formerly owning a chain of theatres in North and South Carolina, has moved his residence from Hamlet to Charlotte and those with an ear to the ground declare he is planning to launch another extensive theatre circuit with headquarters in Charlotte.

H. B. Varner of Lexington, secretary of the North Carolina M. P. T. O., was a Charlotte visitor the past week on business in connection with the mid-winter convention. Mr. Varner declared the membership of the state organization was greater now than ever before in its history.

Among the Carolina exhibitors in Charlotte the past week were the following: U. T. Rice, of the Piedmont Amusement Company, Winston-Salem, N. C.; J. E. Simpson, Gastonia, N. C.; Marsh Morrow, of the White Way, Dunn, N. C.

Santa Claus was a visitor at the Century, New and Garden theatres, of the Whitehurst chain, during the week before Christmas, and at the first two theatres special prologues, in which the Saint was featured, were presented. Souvenirs were given the children and Santa Claus held receptions in the lobbies between shows.

J. Louis Rome, manager of the Broadway, Apollo and Rialto theatres, put on a stunt during last week which helped to fill his houses. On the stages were studio lights and the needed equipment, and "screenings" were made of selected members of the audience by Miss Babe Stewart, cousin of Anita Stewart, a director and a skilled camerawoman.

St. Louis Squibs

George West, brother of Billy, the famed comedian, who represents Norca Pictures was a caller of the past week.

E. W. Hammons, head of the Educational Film Company, was in town for a few hours and called on Harry Hynes, St. Louis manager for Educational.

While Fred C. Ditzenberg, owner-manager of the St. Clair Odeon, East St. Louis, was booking pictures at First National someone stole his automobile from in front of the exchange. The boys work fast in St. Louis.

H. J. Rosenberg of H. J. Rosenberg, Inc., visited local independent exchanges to interest them in a pageant play he is selling.

Among the prominent visitors of the week was Arthur Schoenstadt, owner of the Atlantic Boulevard, Ashland and Brighton Park theatres in Chicago. He put in several hours playing golf with old friends here.

J. Fundis of Marshall, Ill., has purchased the theatre in that city owned by L. J. Bulger.

Florida Slants

J. Wolfman, of New York, who promoted and built a motion picture studio, in St. Petersburg last winter, is back again in the land of sunshine.

J. F. Metz, representing W. A. Boling, the new owner of the Sans Souci theatre in Ybor City, says they will start dismantling that house, on or about February 1st of the new year, and that everything but the four walls will be for sale.

Virginia Pearson is one motion picture actress who can put over a "personal appearance" in a way that increases her popularity. G. D. Cooley, Manager of the Victory theatre, Tampa, had Miss Pearson as a three day attraction last week. She drew immense business and made a host of friends here.

The Business and Professional Woman's Club of Tampa are going to have a series of entertainments during the winter. The first will be Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, who will deliver a lecture at the Tampa Bay Casino on January 2nd. The title of his lecture is "Midst Ice and Snow in Labrador," which will be illustrated with several reels of motion pictures and stereopticon slides.

Rhode Island Briefs

A final meeting of the creditors of the Amber Star Film Corporation of this city has been called for December 23. A voluntary petition in bankruptcy was filed by this concern in the Federal Court here in June, the liabilities being listed at $120,115.87 and assets at $662.61. Frederick S. Peck of Barrington is the principal creditor.

The week before Christmas at the Providence motion picture houses in some respects savored of "old home week." The Rialto ran "The Four Horsemen" on its third presentation in the city. The Victory offered "Way Down East," also the third time in the city, while other houses had pictures which have been shown previously. The Emery, part pictures and part vaudeville, showed "Trifling Women."

The Capitol theatre, beginning December 18, establishes a new price of 10 cents to any part of the house from 10:30 to noon. The Victory adopted this policy some time ago.

The Bijou theatre in Pawtucket has just closed a popularity contest. The contest was conducted for about three weks on a voting plan, a vote being given each ticket purchaser. The winner, who has not yet been announced, will get a free trip to New York.

Indianapolis Close-Ups

Attorneys for F. J. Rembusch fought prosecution on a charge of operating the Grace theatre at Martinsville, Ind., on Sunday on the theory the theatre afforded an opportunity for mental rest for patrons and that the theatre was a disseminator of news and therefore not subject to the blue law.

They were unsuccessful, Rembusch being found guilty by a jury in the Morgan circuit court and fined $1 and costs. Frank Jewel, manager for Rembusch, was acquitted, however.

Proponents of censorship and specific prohibition of Sunday operation of theatres were quiet in the past week, but theatrical interests were watching closely for their next move. The State Legislature meets early in January and the usual crop of bills inimical to the theatre are expected to spring up.

The Mutual Burlesque Association officials, at a meeting here last week, decided conditions warranted erection of a new 1,600-seat burlesque theatre, to which the Mutual shows would move from the Broadway. A site was not selected.

The South Theatre Corporation, of South Bend, filed preliminary certificate of dissolution.

Canadian Jottings

Important changes affecting several moving picture theatres at Windsor, Ontario, have taken place. Loew's theatre at Windsor passed into the discard on Monday, December 11, with the taking over of the Loew house by the Capitol Theatre Company, a local syndicate. On that date the name of the theatre was changed from "Loew" to "Capitol" and various changes were also made in the policy of the theatre. Announcement was also made that the Capitol Theatre had acquired the Windsor theatre, also of Windsor, and would operate the two houses.

With these changes also came the news that the Empire theatre, one of the older houses in Windsor, had been closed permanently by the interests which control the Capitol Theatre Company.

The new Capitol was erected by Marcus Loew only three years ago for the usual policy of presenting five acts of vaudeville and feature pictures. Announcement is made that vaudeville and pictures will be continued under the Capitol management, the general admission price for matinees being 16 cents and that for the evening shows being 37 cents. The theatre reopened as the Capitol with Paramount's "Clarence" as the film feature.

A more or less significant theatre transaction in Toronto, Ontario, has been the buying back of the National theatre, Yonge street, by Sam Garr, former proprietor, from Sol Allen, brother of Jule and J. J. Allen, to whom he sold the theatre some months ago. The National is a small downtown theatre, but it has had a successful career. Mr. Garr has also bought the People's theatre, Queen street, Toronto, for the presentation of pictures and vaudeville.

Harry S. Dahn, formerly of the Capitol theatre, Regina, Sask., has been established as manager of the big Capitol theatre in Montreal, in succession to H. M. Thomas, general supervisor of theatres for the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, who has temporarily taken charge of the Capitol theatre, Winnipeg, Oral Cloakey having been appointed manager of the Capitol theatre, Hamilton, formerly the Loew theatre in that city.

Western Penn Notes

I. A. Farrah, who formerly conducted the Penn Film exchange, Chestnut street near Third, Harrisburg, has just been made manager of the new Victoria theatre, the largest motion picture theatre in Altoona. The theatre was finished last summer, having been built by James George, one of the pioneer motion picture exhibitors of Harrisburg, who, with his brother, Athens George, is credited with having made a fortune out of the Victoria theatre in the latter city, before they sold it several years ago to the Wilmer & Vincent interests.

The Galen theatre, Marysville, Pa., recently ruined by fire, is to be rebuilt by the owner, Amos Fisher. He will erect a brick and frame building, using portions of the brick walls of the old structure that were left standing.

Following recent negotiations it is learned that the Paramount theatre, one of the leading picture houses in Mechanicsburg, Pa., has been sold by Samuel Rubin to Walter Yost, who is now managing the house.

The Victoria motion picture theatre, Front and Adams streets, Steelton, Pa., formerly leased by I. A. Farrah, has come under the control of Mr. Schiff, who has bought outright the interior equipment, which was owned by Mr. Farrah.

A company headed by Dr. Spangler, of Millerstown, is erecting a new brick motion picture theatre in that place. It is understood it will be opened about January 15. The seating capacity will be 600. The house will be known as the Lyric.

Every child who brought a toy to either the Victoria, Colonial or Majestic theatres, all Wilmer & Vincent houses in Harrisburg, Pa., was admitted free to the matinee performances on December 16. The purpose of the plan was to obtain toys for distribution on Christmas to the poor children of the city through medium of the Toy Mission, conducted by philanthropic organizations of Harrisburg. C. Floyd Hopkins, manager of the theatres, announced that the attendance at all three theatres was most gratifying. Drums and dolls predominated among the contributions thus obtained.

San Francisco Items

"Birthday Week" was recently celebrated at the Granada theatre when that prominent theatre's first year was celebrated. Both managing directors Eugene H. Roth and Jack Partington of the Rothchild Corporation that controls four theatres in San Francisco, stated the Granada has been a wonderful success. To start the celebration out right, usherettes began things the first day by presenting President Herbert L. Rothchild and Managing Directors Roth and Partington with a huge birthday cake, which was called by its makers a "Grande Torte."

On the cake burned a single candle and after it had been lighted a second candle was added to "grow on." An elaborate program was prepared for "Birthday Week" which matched the opening program about a year ago. An elaborate dance fantasie, featuring a large number of dancers staged with lavishness was the "piece de resistance" sharing interest with one of Paul Ash's most ambitious concert programs, and with the splendid feature picture, Peter B. Kyne's story, "Brothers Under The Skin." Messrs. Rothchild, Roth and Partington received congratulations and birthday cards not only from some of the most prominent residents of San Francisco and California, but from some of the

"Man's Size"
Fox—4316 Feet
(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WILLIAM RUSSELL hasn't had much of a season judging from the pictures which have been graced by his personality, but "Man's Size" is of a different sort—a good little Christmas present and he should feel highly grateful that he has a story made to order for him. Which is to say that it carries some dramatic situations, progresses evenly and sustains the interest without its obviousness intruding to any extent.

Coincidence crops out now and then, but this is to be expected from such a raw melodramatic pattern. The concluding scene offers a neat surprise which is entirely unexpected. With the opening caption the spectator anticipates another Mounted Police tale because it refers to the Northwest. But the familiar Redcoat never makes his appearance—which is something in the picture's favor.

William Russell is such a tense player that he has to have a plot to fit him—else he appears out of character. "Man's Size" gives him his opportunity. Its locale is the open spaces and one of the central figures is a man with vengeance in his heart. Which means that hatred sears his soul. Having been given up for dead, he returns to find his wife married to another. Overcome with wrath he seizes the child and brings her up as a wildflower of the woods. Later she is sold to a vicious bootlegger who is to take her away and marry her when the supposed father puts in an appearance and informs the man of vengeance that she is his own child. So we have Russell hitting his stride and putting over some melodramatic punch in his pursuit of the bootlegger. Of course he is successful and the girl is brought back to her repentant father.

The action is as primitive as the setting in which it is laid. And the star is called upon to keep busy in and out of the saddle. He has a competent company which includes Charles K. French as the vengeful husband; Stanton Heck, as the villain, and Alma Bennett, as the girl. This actress may be called a newcomer and she possesses both charm and talent. Good for those audiences who want the open spaces where men are men.

Girl is brought up in a rough atmosphere and sold to a bootlegger. The supposed father appears and informs the vengeful husband that the ehild is his own. The hero pursues the bootlegger and brings the girl baek to her repentant father.

Classification—Melodrama of the open spaees.

Production Highlights — The puneh to the situations. The elimax and surprise ending. The good work of east. The first rate atmosphere.

Exploitation Angles—This suggests a smart teaser eampaign linking up with title. Sporting goods stores and shoe-dealers, etc., might cooperate. Feature the outdoors atmosphere.

"A Bill of Divorcement"
Associated Exhibitors—Six Reels
(Reviewed by Glenn Watkins)

THIS story was so well done on the stage by such an admirable cast that we were rather disappointed in the screen version. Its a difficult matter to convey on the screen the emotional scenes in which Alan Pollock and Katherine Cornell triumphed and which carried the play to the pinnacle of success during its long run in New York last season. The plot material, in the first place, is too meagre, for a six-reel production and padding is evident throughout.

With the exception of Constance Binney, the cast is made up of English players. Fay Compton, a beautiful English actress, is called upon to do most of the emotional work. Both these stars, however, add their personal beauty to the opus, which is worth something. The male members of the personnel, including Malcolm Keen, are inclined to overact, in fact, several in the cast seem to work like automatons—being tied by strings to the director. Mr. Keen has the role made famous by Mr. Pollock.

The story has to do with a man who, immediately after his marriage, confesses to his bride that there is a strain of insanity in his family. A while later he is afflicted himself and is sent away. His wife, ever faithful, waits ten years for him. Then she learns that his case is incurable. She welcomes then the attentions of another man whom she marries. Husband No. 1 then escapes from the asylum. He was to have been discharged in another week completely cured. He returns to find his wife with husband No. 2. Then follows a series of dramatic moments winding up with the wife going with the other man and the daughter deciding to devote her life to making her father happy.

The return of the husband offers the climax of the picture and it is in these scenes that one wishes that the husband and his ertswhile wife could use their voices to express their feelings. It is a fair program picture.

The Cast

| Hilary Fairfield | Malcolm Keen |
| Margaret, the bride | Fay Compton |
| Hestor Fairfield | Dora Gregory |
| Doctor Alliot | Henry Vibart |
| Sydney Fairfield | Constance Binney |
| Gray Meredith | Henry Victor |
| Kit Pumprey | Martin Walker |
| Rev. Pumprey | Fenress Llwellwyn |

By Clemenee Dane. Direeted by Denison Clift. Scenario by Denison Clift. Distributed by Associated Exhibitors through Pathe Exehange, Ine.

The Story—Deals with the effects of the measure permitting divorce in eases of hopeless insanity. A man on the eve of his marriage confesses a strain of insanity in his family. He is committed to an asylum. The wife, in spite of her love for another, waits for him, until she is told her husband's ease is incurable. Then she weds another. The husband escapes, completely cured. He returns home to find the other man. The man appeals to his wife to return to him and she decides to do so, until under the persuasion of her new lover and her daughter, she deserts him and leaves him to the eare of his daughter.

Classification—A society drama with an original theme, but not holding mueh in entertainment value.

Production Highlights—Constanee Binney's presence in this pieture is a saving factor. The produetion has been attractively mounted, possessing some exteriors of surpassing seenie beauty. The confession of the man.

Exploitation Angles—The big point for you to eonvey to the public in this one is that it is a picturization of the well known stage hit in whieh Alan Polloek won fame in New York last season. It also has Constance Binney as its star, whieh should be played up.

"A Dangerous Game"
Universal—5,087 Feet
(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

GLADYS WALTON is given opportunity in this release for a spirited and varied performance, and her following should be well pleased by it. First as the orphaned little waif, communing with the fairies in the woods, whose happiness is shattered by her heartless foster parents, then as a young girl growing to maturity and finally as the young lady returned from school, Miss Walton gives a fresh and appealing portrayal.

There is a timely angle, too, to this picture which offers abundant opportunity for novel exploitation. Gret'n Ann, played by Miss Walton, goes to a spiritist seance with her newly adopted uncle, where she discovers the trickery which is being employed and shows it up. There is a chance here to stir up no end of profitable discussion. No one, whatever their belief, can take offense at this exposé, because none will deny that a large number of fakirs have operated as spirit mediums, and you can stir up some interesting discussion, through the usual exploitation channels, as to whether all mediums are fakes or not. We mention this at length because it is the outstanding selling point of the picture.

The story is an entertaining and fairly substantial one, well fitted to the star's talents, and King Baggot has made of it what seems to us to be one of the best pictures Miss Walton has had in some time. There are plentiful touches of comedy and of wistful childish fantasy. Then, too, for a pleasant change, the lonely old bachelor does NOT marry his beautiful ward.

Excellent comedy is contributed by William Robert Daly and Kate Price, as the warm hearted brakeman and his wife, and Spottiswoode Aitken gives one of his characteristic performances.

| Gretchen Ann Peebles | Gladys Walton |
| Edward Peebles | Spottiswoode Aitken |
| Uncle Stillson Peebles | Otto Hoffman |
| Aunt Constance | Rosa Gore |
| Bill Kelley | William Robert Daly |

| John Kelley | Robert Agnew |
| Pete Sebastian | Edward Jobson |

| Madame Gaunt | Christine Mayo |
| Her Manager | Harry Carter |
| The Butler | Bill Gibbs |

Adapted by Hugh Hoffman from the story by Louis Dodge. Direeted by King Baggot. Photographed by Vietor Milner. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Gret'n Ann, when mistreated by her foster parents, runs away and hops a freight train. The kindly old brakeman takes her home to his family, but she feels herself an intruder and again runs away. She walks into a wealthy old oil king's house and announees she has come to stay. He adopts her. They go to a spiritual seanee and Gret'n saves him from being duped by the medium. He sends her to a fashionable seminary, asking her to marry him when she returns, to whieh she thoughtlessly consents, not realizing the import of it. An affair develops with the brakeman's eldest son, John, and when she returns from school, she realizes that it is John she loves. The old man, however, realizes the situation and releases her.

Classification—Comedy drama, with touches of pathos and strong thread of romance.

Production Highlights—Gret'n Ann's woodland talks with the fairies. The Kelley family. The exposé of the spirit medium's methods.

Exploitation Angles—As outlined above, play on the spirit angle. A fortune teller in the lobby might earry this idea. Interest your patrons in the exposé of how spooks are produced.

Drawing Power—Should be exeellent in houses not needing super speeials.

"Conquering the Woman"

Ideal-Associated Exhibitors—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS is a familiar story with an equally familiar setting. We have with us the proud and haughty daughter of a democratic father who is so patronizing that he determines to cure her. She arouses his antagonism through her foreign manner and a foreign fiance in search of a rich dowry. So the father places her aboard a merchant ship with a cowboy friend as her companion. And the boat reaches the familiar setting—the desert isle.

The plot may be anticipated through the title even before the first caption appears. But once the first scene arrives there is no surprise and very little suspense. The girl is shocked over the rough manner of the cowboy and he is equally shocked with his haughty companion. However the call of romance is heard and the young people respond. Under its influence they fall in love and the girl learns something of humility and a few things concerning raw realities. They don't want to be rescued. Eventually the French count returns and kidnaps the heiress, leaving the cowboy alone on the island. This also re-introduces the girl's father who accompanied by the cowpuncher pursues the kidnapper and the daughter is rescued.

The picture, while directed by King Vidor, who when given a chance can show something in the way of imaginative ideas, does not leave its orthodox groove. Here he seems to be overpowered with a conventional plot and characterization. He has managed to make it entertaining through most of its scenes because of some progressive action, the fine atmosphere and backgrounds, but he will have to answer for dressing up the isle like a beach at a private bathing resort.

Florence Vidor is always appealing in her roles and again flashes her charming personality and her sincere talent, while David Butler is thoroughly at ease as the cowboy. The story moves along with credible speed and should prove acceptable with audiences who are not fed up with ancient formulas. If we must have old-fashioned plots, let is at least have them dressed up as good as the one found in "Conquering the Woman."

| Aunt Sophia | Mathilda Brundage |

| Shorty Thompson | Roscoe Karns |
| Count Henri | Peter Burke |
| Sandy MacTavish | Harry Todd |

By Henry C. Rowland. Scenario by Frank Howard Clark. Directed by King Vidor. Photographed by George Barnes.

The Story—Treats of a spoiled society girl who acquires foreign manner and a titled fiance. Which is not pleasing to her father. To break his daughter's spirit he places her aboard a merchant ship with a cowboy friend of his for a companion. And both are stranded on a desert isle. The girl is offended with the cowboy and his rough manner and he is offended with her patronizing manner. Eventually they fall in love. The titled fiance appears and kidnaps the girl but the father and the cowboy pursue and rescue her.

Classification—Desert isle locale, with plot based upon democratic father determined to cure his daughter of her haughty, patronizing ways. Comedy and adventure dominant.

Production Highlights—The good exteriors. The sincere work as usual of Florence Vidor and David Butler. The atmosphere. The romantic interest.

Exploitation Angles—Title suggests a teaser campaign with women's shops. Play it up as story of girl being tamed through contact with raw realities.

Drawing Power—Good for neighborhood houses.

"Wasted Lives"

Second National—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

THERE are enough good points in connection with "Wasted Lives" to warrant its meeting with general favor, provided it is not offered as anything more than a good program picture. The story does embrace a sort of dynamic theme, which with skilled direction and an adequate cast might have been made into a picture much above the average. As it is, it carries considerable appeal and a generous portion of human interest.

From a production standpoint, there are some well designed and splendidly balanced interiors, a few delightfully pleasing exteriors, including one garden scene of remarkable beauty. The photography also is commendable throughout.

There are sequences embracing heart-rending incidents identified with the late world war, which have an important bearing upon the story, and which are cleverly blended to avoid leaving depressing effect. Presenting a worthy moral, the picture is also thoroughly clean and may be described above the average as modest entertainment. The work of little Phillippe de Lacy, as the four-year-old son of a successful surgeon, offsets the weak endeavors of the rest of the cast to be convincing.

| Mrs. Jonathan Adams | Lillian Leighton |
| Madge Richards | Margaret Loomis |
| Ned Hastings | Arthur Osborne |
| Noah Redstone | Walt Whitman |
| Bobby Adams | Phillippe de Lacy |
| Mrs. Hastings | Fannie Midgley |

Directed by Clarence Geldert. Produced by Mission Film Corporation.

The Story—Two men of wealth and position love the same girl. One showers her with attention, while the other divides his interests, being a young surgeon who wishes to devote his skill to the relief of suffering among crippled children. The girl marries the latter. His wealthy mother finances a hospital for children, where the little unfortunates are cured of divers ills, and treated with music in place of drugs. Meanwhile, a son has been born to the couple, and when he is about four years of age, his famous father is called to the colors. Dr. Adams saves many lives of maimed men, suffers himself from shell shock and is reported dead. His mother in rebellion, withdraws her support from the hospital. Later, suffering from accident is carried there herself, just as her son returns from France. While seeming to be without life, she is revived, all are reunited and the surgeon re-established in his beloved life work.

Classification—Society drama, embracing the old triangle situation, but also touching upon a new and worthy theme.

Exploitation Angles—Touch upon the theme of relieving suffering among innocent children, embracing a tie-up with music stores

"Garrison's Finish"

Allied Producers and Distributors Corp.—Eight Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

JACK PICKFORD stages a comeback in this picture. It is quite the best role he has ever had and Mary's Brother takes advantage of the many opportunities offered in an absorbing story to put over some sure fire stuff in the way of realistic fights and thrilling horse riding. The production is notable for its "shots" of some real racing classics. The running of the Metropolitan Classic at Belmont Park, New York, and the Kentucky Derby at Louisville are both shown with all their exciting incidents and vast crowds.

The story is adapted from the novel of the same title and is a work vibrant with action. The picture opens with a bang and closes with some "edge of the seat" scenes when the camera records the actual running of the racing classic below the Mason-Dixon line.

The exteriors, many of which were staged in and around Louisville, are gems of the photographic art. The cast is a good one. Madge Bellamy in the leading supporting role is a refreshing actress. No one could ask for a more villainous villain than Clarence Burton portrays and his co-worker in crime, Lilly Allen, is admirably portrayed by Ethel Grey Terry. Charles A. Stevenson and Charles Ogle are other prominent members of the personnel.

As for dramatic situations, "Garrison's Finish" can boast of a full quota. The scenes attending the attempted "kidnapping" of the Colonel's entry in the derby and the hero and the race between the two factions, with Billy and his mount aboard a motor truck and the villains in a "Henry Built," will stir the most jaded fan. The winning of the Derby begins the picture to a highly satisfactory climax. The subtitles are fine. They were written by Jack's sister, sometimes heard of as Mary Pickford, who also acts in the films.

The Story—Billy Garrison, "framed" by a couple of shady racing folk, is charged with "pulling" a race. He is suspended. Attacked in a saloon, he is injured and loses his memory. Found in a park by two vagrants with a card in his hand bearing the name and address of girl who has fallen in love with him, he is taken South to the home of the girl, whose father is a racing enthusiast. Here he is able to redeem himself and ride the Colonel's horse to victory in the Kentucky Derby and win the girl.

Classification—A tale of romance and adventure in the horse racing world.

Production Highlights—Some of the best racing scenes ever put in a screen play, including views of the actual running of the Kentucky Derby and the Metropolitan Handicap at Belmont Park, New York. The thrilling race between the villains and Billy as the latter tries to get Rogue to the track and the villains try to prevent it. The exterior scenes in Dixie.

Exploitation Angles—Might fix up a horse in racing regalia, put a fully clothed jockey astride and start him through the town with appropriate advertising.

Drawing Power—There is no reason why live-wire exhibitors shouldn't turn this feature into a very successful box office attraction anywhere.

"The Ninety and Nine"

Vitagraph—6800 Feet

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

WELL, folks, they've all come back. Yes, and they're in the movies! What? Why, the mortgage on the old homestead. The evil working villain. The hero fleeing from misguided justice. The village belle falling in love with said hero. The dirty deeds on the part of the villain to "git rid" of our hero. The village "human newspaper." The dash of the hero to rescue the folks in the next town. The arrival of the "papers" setting forth that Tom Silverton isn't guilty after all and the close-up of the loving doves "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree."

Doesn't all this conjure up memories of the days when you used to sneak down to the old "opery house," and hiss the villain and loudly stamp your feet as the old engine poked its nose through the scenery, emitted a couple of puffs from its chimney, the hero dropped from the cab and clasped Nellie to his bosom? Didn't you like it in the halcyon days? Sure you did and you'll like it now, for in the second screen version, Vitagraph has made it all into a sure fire meller with all the trimmings and a bang up climax that will pull most folks close to the edge of the chairs.

The forest fire and the running of the locomotive through the flames to rescue the folks in a neighboring town is the big feature of this production. Seldom has a forest fire been more realistically portrayed on the shadow stage. This feature is well done—both coming and going. On the way back the hero drags a freight train filled with human beings.

The direction is good throughout, and the camera work during the fire scenes deserves praise. Life in a small town is realistically pictured and right here it might be mentioned that this one should prove a strong drawing card in the towns of these United States. Vitagraph has done well by this old classic of the barnstorming days.

The Story—A mysterious murder forces Phil Bradbury to flee and in a small town assumes the name of Tom Silverton. Here Tom falls in love with Ruth Blake. Later his old sweetheart and her new lover come to town for a vacation. Here the new lover frames him and awaits a detective from New York to arrest him. A forest fire starts in the village and Tom runs a locomotive through the blazing timber and rescues the inhabitants of the town. Then comes word of his innocence.

Production Highlights—The dash of Silverton in a locomotive through a blazing forest fire to rescue the inhabitants of a neighboring village. The fine attention to detail. David Smith's excellent direction. Some fine camera work during the forest fire scenes.

Exploitation Angles—Why not rig up a small locomotive made out of beaver board, put a Ford inside it and drive it about town, loudly ringing a large bell the while? Play up the fact that this is the film version of the famous stage play. Tell them about Colleen Moore, Warner Baxter and other well known stars in the cast.

Drawing Power—There has been a demand for a rehabilitation of the old favorites lately. If your patrons are among those that like these pictures, hop to this one.

"Captain Fly-by-Night"

F. B. O.—4900 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

JOHNNIE WALKER has starred in a variety of pictures since his big success in "Over the Hill," and the best of these is "Captain Fly-By-Night," which in spite of its will-o'-the-wisp title, is a generally pleasing photoplay revolving around the old Mission period of California history. Its author is Johnston McCulley, who wrote "The Mark of Zorro," and who has offered in "Captain Fly-By-Night," another story with the same setting.

There is supposed to be sustained suspense in this feature concerning the identities of two strangers, one of whom is known to be the mysterious bandit of the King's Highway, from whom the title is suggested. This suspense falls short, but it doesn't make any difference in view of the fact that the picture is intelligently directed, well acted and crammed with colorful action.

Its star proves his versatility by appearing as a Spanish caballero in the California of 1824. It is a picturesque role and Walker's personality makes it more so. Swordplay has a prominent part in the development of the story, which is one of those romantic, adventurous tales of a chivalrous and daring hero with a tendency toward bravado. In its denouement the picture approaches the spectacular. The climax presents a battle scene with a few hundred soldiers and horses mixing up in a snappy fashion. Then there is the thrill of flashing swords—a duel staged in high bell tower. Incidentally this set is a splendid one.

The whole picture has a historical interest by reason of its California Mission settings. And American history was made in those early days when Spaniards and Mexicans owned the land. Shannon Day, who appears opposite the star, is a good type for the senorita, while Victory Bateman is an acceptable duenna. William K. Howard is responsible for the capable direction. We would say that "Captain Fly-By-Night" has a definite audience appeal—because of its romance, setting and action.

The Cast

First Stranger.....Johnnie Walker
Second Stranger.....Francis McDonald
Anita.....Shannon Day
Cassara.....Edward Gribben
Senora.....Victory Bateman
Padre Michael.....James McEldern
Indian.....Charles Stevens
Governor.....Bert Wheeler
Gomez.....Fred Kelsey

By Johnston McCulley. Scenario by Eve Unsell. Directed by William K. Howard. Photographed by Lucien Andriot.

The Story—Treats of mysterious adventure in early days of California with highwaymen known as "Captain Fly-by-Night" found excitement and romance.

Classification—Adventure story of chivalrous hero who is a bandit—Locale, California in 1824.

Production Highlights—The adventurous action. The climax showing a vivid battle scene. The swordplay. The good work of Walker.

Exploitation Angles—Would suggest making a feature of early California history—putting over the color and atmosphere in lobby and prologue—dressing your ushers in Mexican and Spanish costumes, etc. Play up Walker as star of "Over the Hill."

Vitagraph—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A REGULAR slice of life is this little document from Vitagraph—a slice of small city politics which revolve around the glass top desk of the mayor and the swivel chair of the editor of the local paper. You all recognize this bit of enmity which puts color in our smaller communities, and Jess Robbins, the director of this picture has brought forth all its vitality—all its humanities and realism. Trust Robbins to make no mistake when it comes to incorporating lifelike incident. He showed a sample of his skill with "Too Much Business," and in "A Front Page Story" he makes his picture so human—so interesting that is stands out a conspicuously fine, little document.

The comedy note is dominant because it is introduced by Edward Horton, a comedian with a sure grasp upon the qualities which create humor. He plays in a deadly serious manner the part of a lackadaisical youth determined to get a job. He rides into the town at the wheel of a flivver and puts an ad in the local paper. There is some deft comedy introduced with the car—which is not of the slapstick brand—even though the car is always a good prop for hokum. And by using his head and taking advantage of opportunity when it knocks he eases himself into a partnership with the editor.

The rest of the story has to do with patching up the feud between his elder partner and the mayor—and he does this by sheer bluff. The front page story is nothing but a screaming scarehead announcing that the mayor will be exposed. It precipitates a deal of anxiety for all concerned—even for the partner whose ideas of journalism follow the orthodox channels. The old man's daughter is a handy girl about the office. And aside from acting as a foil here and there it is her object to carry the romance.

Robbins has uncovered a real old time job printing plant. The place may be small but it looks like the real thing. In fact the atmosphere and background are genuine throughout. Horton gives a sincere portrayal of the youth who acts as peacemaker, while Lloyd Ingraham and James Corrigan as the mayor and editor, respectively, not only look real, but manage to extract the utmost amount of color and humor from their characters.

The Cast

Rodney Marvin.....Edward Horton
Mayor Gorham.....Lloyd Ingraham
Virginia Hayward.....Edith Roberts
Matt Hayward.....James Corrigan
Don Coates.....W. E. Lawrence
Tommy.....Buddy Messenger
Mrs. Gorham.....Mathilde Brundage
Suzanne Gorham.....Lila Leslie
Jack Pedler.....Tom McGuire

By Arthur Goodrich. Scenario by F. W. Beebee. Directed by Jess Robbins. Photographed by Vernon Walker. Produced by Vitagraph.

The Story—Youth in search of work rides into small city at wheel of dilapidated flivver. Puts ad in local paper and by using his wits becomes partner of editor. His object is to patch up the quarrel between the editor and the mayor—which he does by bluffing with a scarehead story on front page of paper. Wins the editor's daughter.

Classification—Comedy-drama of political life in small city—with humor rich and novel.

Production Highlights—The exceptional direction in getting every possible situation and idea from story. The fine acting by Edward Horton, James Corrigan and Lloyd Ingraham. The splendid atmosphere. The human interest. The convincing detail.

Exploitation Angles—This title suggests a smart campaign to co-operate with local editors. Put out teasers, briefs, etc. Play up Horton as a comer. Treat it lightly. Bill it as one of the most human and lifelike stories of the screen.

Drawing Power—Once seen will be advertised by word of mouth. Make a play to get the crowds in on this one, as it deserves patronage. Good for any locality.

"The Kingdom Within"

Schertzinger-Hodkinson—6036 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ANY melodrama of the open places which carries a spiritual flavor—which has for one of its central characters a figure possessing a strong regenerating influence — which releases a rich vein of conflict, romance and human interest is bound to prove interesting. "The Kingdom Within" is seldom picturey because coincidence is absent, and the director has not shaped any conveniences. In the first place he has been given us a plot which rings with a good deal of truth despite the variations of its conflict.

First we see a blacksmith proud that he is to have a son who will grow up and be strong. But the boy is born a cripple with a paralyzed arm. Through the years the father turns upon him with venomous hate. The youth is compensated in that he possesses a keen spiritual insight. He is happy carving toys for the children of the community which adjoins a lumber camp. The scenes up to this point carry a heart tug and are well constructed and the subsequent sequences carry on the good work. Next door lives the girl who is ostracized because her brother is in jail for robbing his partner. She also has hate in her heart, and the boy exerts his spirituality in turning her hatred into love for mankind.

Meanwhile the melodramatic flavor is keeping pace with the heart interest. Indeed it is admirably interwoven so that it appears perfectly dovetailed—as if each incident had its place. There is a villainous lumberman who has a grudge against the partner of the man in prison—and kills him. Circumstantial evidence links the girl's brother as the murderer since he has his freedom. The villain steals into the girl's house and threatens to kill her if she informs the authorities. He returns to carry out his vengeance. In a struggle with the cripple, the boy recovers the use of his arm. This is a new kind of miracle and is much more convincing than what is usually revealed through the efficacy of prayer. So the father is happy that his dream is realized.

It's a good audience picture, finely staged, and carrying a plot which holds the interest all the way. One or two slight gaps are permissible under the circumstances. The acting is splendid as contributed by Russell Simpson, Pauline Starke and Ernest Torrence. Clayton Hamilton's titles are well written, full of meaning and aid considerably in giving the feature its value.

The Cast

Caleb Deming.....Russell Simpson
Danny West.....G. Walt Covington
Ames.....Gaston Glass
Emily Preston.....Pauline Stark
Will Preston.....Hallam Cooley
Krieg.....Ernest Torrence
Dodd.....Gordon Russell
Connie.....Marion Feducha

By Kenneth B. Clarke. Directed by Victor Schertzinger. Photographed by J. S. Stumar. Produced by Victor Schertzinger. Released by Hodkinson.

The Story—Treats of the spiritual regeneration of a crippled boy's father who hated him because he wasn't big and strong, and a girl who hated the community because she was ostracized on account of her brother being in jail. Lumberman threatens to kill her. When he returns to carry out his threat the crippled boy gives him battle. The boss lumberman twists his arm and makes it perfect. And the father is happy.

Classification—Melodrama and romance interwoven and carrying a strong spiritual flavor.

Production Highlights—The good direction. The spiritual flavor. The human interest. The scenes between the boy and girl. The acting of Russell Simpson and Pauline Starke. The excellent atmosphere.

Exploitation Angles—Would advise playing this up as great audience picture, concentrating upon the spiritual flavor. Mention the cast. Use the title for a teaser campaign.

Drawing Power—Good for any type of audience and should draw most everywhere.

A scene from "Choose Your Weapons," Christie-Educational comedy.

"The Freshie"

Kernan—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS will occasion surprise among those followers of Guinn Williams, familiarly known as "Big Boy," to discover him in a story of college life. The majority of our directors have invariably failed to humanize the collegiates correctly. Most of them have little speaking acquaintance with what constitutes a higher or lower seat of learning. The director, here, has not caught the real serious side of college life (no director as yet has caught the true psychology of the undergraduate who carries the world on his shoulders), but he manages to extract a good deal of humor and incident from the plot which is not so far wrong after all.

The star has a likeable personality in the role of a cowpuncher who wants an education. A professor encourages him to prepare for college but once he has matriculated he has his troubles before him. Unfamiliar with sophomoric pranks he becomes the "goat" of the campus. The boys kid the life out of him and hazing comes in for some incident. Finally he makes the acquaintance of the most popular girl and their efforts are concentrated in embarrassing him. They will get him in bad with the faculty by having him arrested upon some trumped-up charge. But during the girl's absence he climbs in a window of her home, encounters a burglar and overpowers him—thus winning the gratitude of the girl and her parent.

The material is slight and really belongs in a polite comedy of three reels. However it offers its moments of amusement once it gets into its stride. At least there is something doing most of the time. Guinn Williams is too talented in the saddle and with firearms to waste his time trying to play a collegiate or attempt comedy. He looks best in the westerns which put his name over. If he must be versatile he should find some story which contains the heroics of lumber camp life, etc.

The Cast

Charles Taylor "Big Boy".....Guinn Williams
Violet Blakely.....Molly Malone
"Tubby" Tarpley.....Lincoln Stedman
Prof. Noyes.....James McElhern
Ranch Foreman.....Edward Burns
Tom.....Leo Phelps
Jack.....Sam Armstrong
"Society" Sam.....J. Buck Russell
Mr. Blakely.....Jules Hauft

By W. Hughes Curran. Directed by W. Hughes Curran. Photographed by Charles S. Stumar.

The Story—Treats of a cowpuncher who hankers for an education. Professor helps him along. The collegiates make life miserable for him. Becomes popular with charming girl and wins her gratitude for overpowering a burglar who breaks into her home.

Classification — Comedy-romance of cowpuncher who seeks college education.

Production Highlights—The sincere acting of star and Molly Malone.. The atmosphere. The even action.

Exploitation Angles—Would advise making a play for high school, college, and boarding school students. Use the title for a teaser campaign. Play up star who has come along fast as new type of cowboy actor.

Drawing Power—Best suited for neighborhood houses and for audiences comprising the younger set.

"The Flirt"

Universal-Jewel—Eight Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

BOOTH TARKINGTON wrote a delightful story in "The Flirt"—a story which presents a vivid close-up of a small town family who are dominated by an irrepressible daughter whose personality and magnetism completely envelop the less colorful charms of her relatives. It is a story which earned the tribute of being truthful. And adapted to the screen it retains its values—its charm—its human appeal, and all of its lifelike incident. For Hobart Henley is one director who can be trusted with such a type of story. He has guided his players so that they might have stepped from the pages of the book—particularly in the personalities of George Nichols as the father, Harold Goodwin as the older brother, Helen Jerome Eddy as the spinster sister and Eileen Percy as the vibrant daughter whose idea of life is to play with men's affections.

The characterization is sound, and so is the plot, which while it releases no strong dramatic moments, manages to entertain through eight reels because of its intimate slice of family life—wherein a wilful daughter runs the household. He has emphasized the contrast between the two sisters and has not forgotten the Tarkington whimsicalities. Perhaps some of the incidents could be dispensed with for the sake of brevity, yet there are few moments when the story sags. The humor is quiet and real. Why not with the tormenting brother ever busy to embarass his pretty sister?

The flirt is content with a small town boy until a city slicker appears after which she transfers her affection. And in doing so she precipitates a heart drama in the home. Father will go to any length to please the girl, so he unwittingly agrees to help the youth promote his worthless stock. It looks like stormy days ahead for the disillusioned old man, but the older son returns and makes good the father's loss in compensation for what his dad did for him in making him realize the value of money.

The atmosphere is there in abundance. We have the average home of the middle class—the family at dinner and in the parlor. The teasing brother may be too portly to be a genuine Tarkington, but the author's humor is not lost through him, nor through the rough-neck son-in-law. The flirt learns her lesson and marries a local boy. And the turkey is carved and peace is in the home. A neat picture, well adapted and directed and good for any house in any locality.

The Cast

Papa.....George Nichols
Mama.....Lydia Knott
Cora.....Eileen Percy
Laura.....Helen Jerome Eddy
Hedrick.....Buddy Messenger
Jimmy.....Harold Goodwin
Della Fenton.....Nell Craig
Sam Fenton.....Tom Kennedy
Valentine Corliss.....Lloyd Whitlock
Richard Lindley.....Edward Hearn
Wade Trumble.....Bert Roach
George Carroll.....William Welch

By Booth Tarkington. Scenario by A. P. Younger. Directed by Hobart Henley. Photographed by Charles Kaufman. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Treats of family life in the average small city. Heroine is such a dominant personality that her relatives seem colorless. She is willful and has her own way. Nearly brings tragedy to home through giving affection and trust to wrong man. But the home and the honor of the family is saved by timely intervention of brother.

Classification—Adaptation of Booth Tarkington's popular novel—showing human interest, comedy and near-tragedy of life in the average middle-class home.

Production Highlights — Director has approached this story with respect for its characterization, plot, color and atmosphere, retaining values of book. The humor, the acting of George Nichols and Eileen Percy. The human interest. The rich detail.

"That Woman"

American Releasing—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE only way to make a moth-eaten story presentable on the screen is to keep the action as progressive as possible, give it a cast which is entirely appropriate, and dress it with a good production. Harry O. Hoyt, always a sincere and hard working director, who is ever striving to appeal to one's intelligence, is burdened with a frayed formula in this theme of the gilded youth who invites family ostracism through his love for a chorus girl—or rather the leading principal of a "words and music" show.

There is no chance to make anything from such a plot when the story follows its orthodox groove even to the compromising situation engineered by the irate father of the boy. However, the director takes much of its obviousness away by his emphasis upon the central situation, that of the conflict which is inspired when the hero marries beneath his station in life. If you can anticipate every scene, you at least have the satisfaction that each has been executed for their full value. Which is to say that the heart interest note is dominant. One catches a close-up of life back-stage—of an opening night—of the tributes paid the star by the impressionable scions in a stage box. The production is much better than the story—oh, much better. The atmosphere of easy living among the idle rich is well suggested. One sees a bit of club life and a slice of color aboard a yacht where the infatuated swain proposes marriage to the star of "The Pink Moon." With these scenes planted it is easy to guess that the father will become enraged over the affair. The bride is known as "that woman." Hence the title. When the actress refuses to accept the familiar bribe to release herself from the entanglement the irate parent resorts to the equally familiar compromise to show the bride up as unfaithful. But this scheme is frustrated. Eventually the couple are successful in the conflict. And all ends happily. Catherine Calvert plays the heroine with proper understanding of the demands of the role. The picture is burdened with a bad set of titles, most of which are hackneyed and ungrammatical. New captions would lift its value.

The Cast

Adora Winstanley.....Catherine Calvert
William Arnold Kelvin.....Joseph Bruelle
William Kelvin.....William Black
Somerton Randall.....George Pauncefort
Morris Eltman.....William Ricciardi
Hilary Weston.....Jack Newton
Mishu.....Norbert Wicki

By Sabin Wood. Senario by Wallace Clifton. Directed by Harry O. Hoyt. Produced by F. C. Mims. Released by American Releasing.

The Story—Tells of a millionaire's son who marries an actress. Which precipitates a conflict with his father, who would disinherit him. The parent endeavors to bribe the actress and then compromise her. He fails and the young people are happy in their love.

Classification—Based upon old formula of rich man's son marrying beneath his station. The wealthy scion and the actress.

Production Highlights—The good production. The scenes in the club, back-stage, in the theatre and aboard the yacht. The conflict between father and son. Miss Calvert's gowns.

Exploitation Angles—Here is another chance to capitalize upon the title with a teaser campaign—exploited through women's specialty shops. Play up the stage romance—which is always popular. Put over dancing numbers for your prologue. Build your copy around life back-stage.

Drawing Power—Best suited for audiences in small cities and towns. Might go well in neighborhoods.

"Hearts Aflame"

Louis B. Mayer-Metro—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

THERE is a powerful theme and a vigorous appeal for the conservation of America's timber resources running through this latest Reginald Barker production which gives it unusual character.

Don't think this is a propaganda picture, however, or a preachy, moralizing tale. Far from it. But the theme of forest conservation is so much an integral part of the story that it is put over powerfully, through the appeal of one of the leading characters.

The cast is an all-star one, and presents an unusually large number of familiar names, but the real honors of the picture are stolen by Frank Keenan, and only slightly less by Anna Q. Nilsson. These two can "troupe," and it is a pleasure to watch their work, which vitalizes the screen into something very human and real.

Frank Keenan's portrayal of Luke Taylor, a retired lumberman who is miserable because there is no more white pine for him to cut, and who chafes under his inactivity, is a genuine triumph. He is the crabbed, grouchy, loveable old lumberman to the life, and his scene alone in the forest with the pines is one of the tensest bits of emotional acting, restrained and yet forceful, that the screen has had.

Miss Nilsson, too, deserves commendation for her sincere acting as the daughter of a man who devoted his life to regrowing timber. It is an appealing portrayal.

Among the other players, Russell Simpson and Martha Mattox contribute excellent comedy relief. Space will not permit of enumerating the other members of the cast who are entitled to mention.

Perhaps we should have mentioned first the great forest fire scenes, since they are probably the outstanding feature of the picture, but portrayals such as Keenan's are rarer than great spectacles. There is a powerful "kick," however, in the forest fire sequence, and the magnificent sweep of the flames, brought out by special color effects, is tremendous.

The Cast

Luke Taylor.....Frank Keenan
Helen Foraker.....Anna Q. Nilsson
John Taylor.....Craig Ward
Bobby Kildare.....Richard Headrick
Black Joe.....Russell Simpson
Philip Rowe.....Richard Tucker
Jim Harris.....Stanton Heck
Aunty May.....Martha Mattox
Charley Stump.....Walt Whitman
Ginger.....Joan Standing
Thad Parker.....Ralph Cloninger
Milt Goddard.....Lee Shumway
Lucius Kildare.....John Dill
Sheriff.....Gordon Magee
Jennie Parker.....Irene Hunt

Adapted by J. G. Hawks and L. G. Rigby from the novel, "Timber," by Harold Titus. Directed by Reginald Barker. Photographed by Percy Hilburn. Produced by Louis B. Mayer.

The Story—Millionaire lumberman, retired, presents his son with half million feet of pine logs stranded in Michigan, when son demands a "flying start." Son, who is a waster, goes to Michigan. He meets Helen Foraker, whose father has regrown 10,000 acres of pine, and whose work she carries on. They join forces and the logs are gotten to the mill. His father attempts to buy the 10,000 acres of pine but Helen refuses. They attempt to force her to sell. The tract is set afire and in the fight to save it, father, son and the girl come to an understanding.

Classification—A thrilling melodrama with splendid human interest and romance; many comedy touches.

Production Highlights—Performances by Keenan and Miss Nilsson. The log drive. The forest fire. The smooth direction.

Exploitation Angles—Feature the log drive and the forest fire, as these are your two big angles. Essay contests on forest conservation might be obtained in the schools. Keenan's return to the screen.

Drawing Power—suitable anywhere.

"Making a Man"

Paramount—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HERE we have a character study put over with enough surefire incident to make it fairly acceptable even though its development shows several gaps which insult the intelligence. Of course the title gives it away. We all know that by the time the fifth reel is concluded the hard-shelled millionaire will learn something of human nature and act accordingly. The only difference from the orthodox treatment is that the girl does not act as the inspiration in making him over. Rather is she a subordinate figure who flits in and out of a few scenes for the sake of providing the romance.

The early locale is a small California city which is owned by the above mentioned Croesus. He is represented as a snob of the first order—a man who patronizes everyone with whom he comes in contact. He is particularly patronizing with the poor underlings who owe him money and in his courtship of the girl he is ever referring to his income tax, etc. A fight is started in his office—which smacks of comedy hokum. And this is the turning point of the story, for the youth goes to New York to keep under cover for a while. He engages a suite at a swell hotel, and lives high. But when he runs out of funds the gaps in the story appear. He hasn't enough money to send a telegram, but it seems as if he could have sent the message collect. So the hotel attaches his traveling bag and clothes.

Now a millionaire who is depicted as the sugar beet king could certainly offer some kind of identification. He ought to be able to raise money from some bank. But this would be spoiling the human interest which is introduced a la O. Henry. The Californian takes to a park bench and gets chummy with a park bum. They eat in hash houses and sleep on the benches. The hero pawns his cuff-buttons for "sinkers" and coffee—his only assets, mind you—yet he is able to appear cleanly shaven. The end is in sight when the girl and her father arrive at the hotel. It is a rather funny scene when they discover him a waiter in a hash house. The identification is easy—the hotel people apologize—the youth learns the human values, and there you are. Simple and obvious, but fairly well played by Jack Holt and Frank Nelson.

The Cast

Horace Winsby.....Jack Holt
Jim Owens.....J. P. Lockney
Patricia Owens.....Eva Novak
Henry Cattermole.....Bert Woodruff
Shorty.....Frank Nelson
Bailey.....Robert Dudley

By Peter B. Kyne. Scenario by Albert Shelby Le Vino. Directed by Joseph Henabery. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—California millionaire is a snob and patronizes everyone, including girl with whom he falls in love. Is compelled to flee community and comes to New York, where he encounters a series of misfortunes. His plight makes him over so that he appreciates real human values. Wins the girl eventually.

Classification—Character study carrying romance, local color, humor and heart interest. Familiar incident and plot.

Production Highlights—Adequate acting by Jack Holt and Frank Nelson. The good production. The O. Henry touch in New York incident. The scenes in the hotel and in the hash-house.

Exploitation Angles—Here's a chance to link up with tailors and clothing stores as well as any merchant catering to men's wear. Play up theme, using a teaser campaign. Holt has a following. Use his name.

Drawing Power—Will be liked by the majority of patrons in most any house. Story is suitable for most any locality.

"Xmas"

(Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven Comedy —Two Reels—Films Booking Offices of America)

A TIMELY comedy is this new DeHaven offering, which is all about Santa Clauses and Christmas trees. It is clean-cut, fast-moving action and it does not need to be shown during the holiday season to be enjoyed.

Carter is a newlywed who entertains his in-laws over Christmas. These in-laws include a couple of youngsters, their mother and a bearded grandfather. The trouble begins when Carter tries to get a Christmas tree with the aid of an axe. He brings it home on the running board of a taxi and its branches pick up all sorts of decorations on the ride. There is a lot of fun when the family starts to dress the tree. A goat, a Christmas present to the cook's little boy, adds to the merriment.

Then there is a Santa Claus sequence. Carter decides to give the kids a surprise. So does grandfather and several other men in the same apartment. Then a second story man, disguised as Santa, starts to operate, and there is no end of confusion. You can play "Xmas" during the holidays or anytime. It is sure to make them happy.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Educator"

Educational—Two Reels

HERE'S a good one. It is full of action, goes after laughs and is pretty sure to get them, and at the same time keeps just enough above the usual type of low comedy to make it safe to show to mixed audiences.

In a western town named Angelville, public sympathy is not with teachers who have endeavored to educate the populace. In consequence, professors who preceded the new teacher (Lloyd Hamilton) have met with many ostacles in trying to "teach" grown up students the proper respect for "teacher."

When the new teacher puts in an appearance, he starts out to win against long odds, and after a difficult time of it, interspersed with a bit of romance, he scores heavily and is made the most popular man of the town.

This is the best work we have seen Lloyd Hamilton do, which may be explained in that he has some funny situations and laugh provoking material to assist in turning out a worth while comedy.—LILLIAN GALE.

"A Quiet Street"

Pathe—Two Reels

EVERY one of "Our Gang," who have won popularity as juvenile players in the "Our Gang" Series are given opportunities to carry scenes on their very own in this comedy. "A Quiet Street" describes the opposite, but does tell the story of happenings on what might be a quiet street if it weren't for "Our Gang."

"Red Mike," a desperate character, robs a passer-by. Previously, the children have been indulging in pranks that have aroused the interest of the police, and when "Mike" makes a get-away, it looks black for the "kids," who are responsible for several noisy capers, and appear to blame for "Mike's" rough work.

There is more activity expressed in this picture than usual, and the pranks of the children are just as entertaining and amusing, so much so that grown-ups who come to bring the children for a laugh, will find themselves getting considerable "kick" out of the situations themselves. In addition, an intelligent bull-dog shares honors for commendable assistance in keeping the fun on high.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Just a Little Bit Late Club"

Second National—One Reel

THIS is apt to meet with a great deal of popularity, despite the fact that the subject "steps on the toes" of many who are in the habit of procastinating at the inconvenience of others.

It shows Bruce Barton, writer of pointed paragraphs, at his typewriter, conceiving the idea of an editorial upon the habit of being late. It has a marked element of amusement, contains a commendable moral and is decidedly well compiled. A safe "filler" for any kind of audience.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Fire the Fireman"

Pathe—One Reel

IN this Paul Parrott assumes the role of a newcomer to the Fire Department. His enlistment does nothing worse than get the regular members of the department in precarious and amusing situations, of "slap-stick" variety.

The substance hinges upon a hotel landlord being willing to have his hotel burned down in order to collect insurance money with which to pay income tax. By this time the one-man Fire Department is thoroughly schooled as to how to extinguish a fire, especially when a fire is desired. There are a few laughs—now and then.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Once Over"

Educational—Two Reels

THE introductory title describes the hero comedian. It reads: "A lover with a brain like new—he never uses it." Which fades into the appearance of Jimmie Adams, who illustrates the lack of mental qualities by indulging in some would-be funny horse play, the horse evidencing considerable intelligence.

It would seem the girl after the comedian's heart is employed as a manicurist in a barber shop. She is entirely too pretty and too clever to be buried in such tiresome attempts at humor as the vehicle otherwise affords. Following a deal of slap-stick wherein Adams gets thrown out of the barber shop in divers ways, he returns as a barber. There are a number of rough customers waiting attention. A few unfortunates get it, and while there may be some humor in the treatment they receive, it was not visible.

A boot-black, described by a title as "a polished gentleman," arrives clad in a fur coat, carrying a stick and leaving his motor and chauffeur outside while he shines a pair of shoes, then returns to his conveyance and is driven off.

The best we can say for this so-called comedy is that there is a wealth of action wasted sparring for humor that is never achieved.—LILLIAN GALE.

"A Good Scout"

Educational—Two Reels

INTERRUPTING the marital troubles of a man whose wife's cooking was not conducive to longevity, comes Jimmie Adams in the role of a book agent. His call is unwelcome and the housewife first calls the poodle dog, then the bull dog. The latter puts the book agent on the run. Two policemen take up the chase and all scamper through a field where straw is heaped in piles and the pursued endeavors to hide, without much success. There is considerable action without humor in the first reel. The second has something to do with the title, since it takes place in a "scout" camp and ends in a swamp, where there are splashes of action, again without humor.

If this subject merits the description of comedy, it also earns the description, slap-stick of a degree headed for zero.—LILLIAN GALE.

Pathe Review No. 188

Pathe—One Reel

IN this review is a little bit of everything. The introductory footage is likely to please those sentimentally inclined, since it delineates the scenic background which illustrates Longfellow's poem, "The Brook and the Wave." It is most appealing.

Follows a description of how artificial birds for use in millinery are made. These finally appear most life-like and the fact that substitutes for real birds are possible, will ease the consciences of women who have employed the genuine for trimming purposes, while incurring sharp censure from bird lovers.

The concluding footage is devoted to a chemical experiment called the "fire snake," an analysis of toe dancing, and ends with fashions in Pathe color.—LILLIAN GALE.

Comedies, Short Subjects & Serials

Stern Bros. Buy Rights to "Buster Brown"

JULIUS and ABE STERN announce the purchase of screen rights to the use of Richard F. Outcault's celebrated cartoons known as "Buster Brown," as the basis for a series of Century Comedies. These rights, it is reported, have been eagerly sought by several companies and in having secured screen rights to these widely known and popular drawings, Stern Brothers are living up to their declaration of releasing an unusually strong program for the coming year.

The Outcault cartoons were first published in the New York Herald and then were widely syndicated all over the world. They were immensely popular not only with the children but also with their parents who laughed at the pranks of Buster and his dog Tige.

On the screen the part of Tige will be taken by "Brownie," the Century Wonder Dog. The part of Buster has not been filled yet, and the Stern brothers are at present in New York looking for a boy to play the part.

Novelty Two Reeler Wins Much Praise

"Man vs. Beast," the Educational Pictures Special, which records the hazardous adventures of a scientific expedition into Darkest Africa, and which met with instant success in the New York showings at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, is continuing its popularity in other exchange centers.

In San Francisco, Roth and Partington ran "Man vs. Beast" for a week at the California theatre.

"One of the short subjects on the screen is really more interesting in a way than the feature picture," said the San Francisco Bulletin in reveiwing this program. "It is 'Man vs. Beast' which records some of the adventures of Louis Shuman in a hunting and scientific trip through Africa."

Two Reeler Completed and Given Main Title

Work on the Mermaid Comedy special for Educational in which Louise Fazenda is featured, supported by Jack Ackroyd, Harry Gribbon, and a big cast of comedy stars, has been completed.

This two-reel laugh subject has been titled "Pest of the Storm Country." It is being prepared now for release, and probably will be on Educational's schedule for February.

In addition to her pig-tails and spit-curls, Miss Fazenda has added a pair of hip boots to her make-up for "Pest of the Storm Country."

Short Subject Program Tried Out

Canadian Exhibitor Enjoys Big Week with Use of Novelty Bill

OPENING to more business than on the biggest features, the Cum Bac theatre in Toronto, of which "Bill" Bailey is manager, enjoyed the patronage of almost unprecedented crowds during the three-day run of a Short Subject program made up of Educational Pictures. The best Saturday matinee record ever made by the house, which was set with Charlie Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms," was smashed by the Short Subject program, which Bailey styled "The Movie Follies," and which has set a new figure both in attendance and in receipts.

Having a vision that responds to a "live" idea, Bailey introduced the All Short Subject program into his theatre after reading a trade journal editorial which pointed out that a Short Subject bill, properly advertised and exploited, should prove advantageous to any exhibitor. The results exceeded his most optimistic hopes.

The opening night was as big as the Cum Bac has had on the biggest features. The second night was better than the first. Saturday night prices were slightly raised, but this did not deter patrons from endeavoring to get in.

Mr. Bailey prepared a special one-sheet to announce his program.

So much attention was attracted by this successful Short Subject program, that the Educational Exchange has received many inquiries about similar programs for other theatres and several such programs are now being arranged.

Pathe Dec. 31 Program Ready

Ten Subjects Listed for Release Include Two New Comedies

THE leading feature of the Pathe program of ten subjects announced for release on Dec. 31 is the Hal Roach kid and animal two-reeler in the Our Gang Comedy series, called: "A Quiet Street." The sarcasm of the title goes without saying. At the start the police are hot after "Red Mike," who has held up and robbed a citizen. Meantime the urchins composing "Our Gang" are up to mischief which causes them to believe that they are objects of all the police activity. It is only when "Red Mike" quits in a mixup with a bulldog that the boys discover themselves to be heroes instead of culprits.

Paul Parrott, ably assisted by Jobyna Ralston, is the hero of the one-reel comedy, "Fire the Fireman." All the other firemen are "fired" because they don't keep step with the new recruit—besides, the money is needed for a new municipal pool room. Thereupon the hotel landlord decides to burn down the place for the insurance money to pay his income tax with, but his daughter calls the police, which arrives with the one-man fire department as the flames burst forth.

The Pathe serial, "Speed," with Charles Hutchison, reaches an exciting eleventh episode in the mining regions.

"Sammy in Siberia," the one-reel Harold Lloyd re-issue, in which Bebe Daniels and Snub Pollard appear.

Pathe Review No. 188 illustrates Longfellow's Poem, "The Brook and the Wave," shows deft fingers making life-like birds, and among other features, presents an astonishing chemical novelty called the "Fire Snake."

Pathe News Nos. 2 and 3 and Topics of the Day No. 53 are released in this program. Also the Aesop's Film Fable called "The Two Trappers."

Artist Model Theme for Baby Peggy's Next

Baby Peggy's next Century Special Production will have as its theme the life of an artist's model. A story of Balzac's is said to be its inspiration, but in order to bring it up to date the tiny star will pose as Mary Pickford, Mae Murray and Gloria Swanson. She wears the rags of Pickford, the bizarre boudoir costume of Swanson and the jazzy dancing costume of Mae Murray.

The story is the joint work of Baby Peggy's father, J. T. Montgomery, and Herman Raymaker, who will direct it. It is being filmed in its last stage and will be ready for the cutting room shortly.

Babe London Signs for Christie Comedies

Babe London, the big girl with the happy smile, who has appeared in a number of Christie Comedies and who is also remembered for her part with Charlie Chaplin in "A Day's Pleasure," has been signed up by a regular contract for Christie Comedies. She has just finished a supporting part with Neal Burns in Al Christie's comedy of life in a shirt waist factory ,and has gone with Christie to Honolulu to be Henry Murdock's leading lady in "A Hula Honeymoon."

Loew Books Lloyd and Rogers Pictures

PROMINENT in the news of "Dr. Jack" bookings is Pathe's interesting statement of a happy program solution connected with showings of Harold Lloyd comedy feature under contracts just made with the Loew Circuit.

Loew, the statement says, booked Will Rogers in the three reel screen drama of humor and pathos, "Fruits of Faith," to play all over the circuit with "Dr. Jack." The Rogers picture is announced for the Rialto for the week of December 31. Following this engagement, the Loew theatres will play the Lloyd-Rogers program uninterruptedly for a total of 110 days.

The forthcoming Loew Circuit Lloyd-Rogers program combination is understood to be based on the conviction that the two pictures, and the two stars, are about as perfect foils to each other as exist in current productions.

"Our Gang" Comedies Acclaimed by Reviewer

Just as Pathe announces a second series of six Hal Roach "Our Gang" comedies with kids and their animal pets, James W. Dean, film reviewer for the Newspaper Enterprise Association of more than four hundred daily papers, saw "A Quiet Street," announced for release on Dec. 24, and was moved to add the following to what he has previously printed about these two-reel novelties.

"The 'Our Gang' Comedies were probably designed to amuse the kids. They are just about the best entertainment for grown-up boys that I have seen.

"Freckle-face Mickey Daniels, 'Sunshine Sammy,' tow-headed Jackie Condon and Jackie Davis, form just the sort of a desperate gang that every fellow belonged to, or feared, when he was a rag-tag and bob-tailed worry to his mother. I laughed more heartily at them in 'A Quiet Street' than I did at Chaplin in 'Easy Street.'"

"Abraham Lincoln" Released by Vitagraph

Quite appropriately, as we are approaching the anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, Vitagraph is releasing the Urban Popular Classic, "Abraham Lincoln, Memories of America's Greatest Statesman." This one-reel production, recorded by James A. Fitz-Patrick, gives in motion pictures a brief but splendidly connected story of the life of the "Savior of His Country," beginning with his birth on Feb. 12, 1809, to his death at the hands of an assassin.

Gladys Westby, who is to be presented in a series of Kidplaylets by Storey Pictures, Inc.

"Penrod" Boys Engaged for Baby Peggy

Practically all the boys who played prominent roles in "Penrod," in which Baby Peggy was loaned to Marshal Neilan for an excellent bit, have been engaged by Julius and Abe Stern to play in Baby Peggy's Next Century Special production.

The boys who have been engaged are Winston Radom, who played the part of Maurice Levy in "Penrod"; Newton Hall, who played the part of the sissy Kenneth, who played the part of the fat boy; Donald Condon and Verne Winter.

New Effects in Bray Comedies

Trick Photography Introduces Novelty with "Colonel Heeza Liar"

THE introduction of some startling new effects is announced by the Bray Productions as a feature of the series of reincarnated "Colonel Heeza Liar" comedies, distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Instead of the outline drawings so familiar in cartoon comedies or the equally familiar motion picture comedies by living actors, the Bray Comedies combine the two in some of the most ingenious trick photography ever shown, it is said. For instance, Colonel Heeza Liar, the only pen and ink character in the first series entitled "Colonel Heeza Liar's Treasure Island," is seen sliding down a bolt of lightning to the deck of a real ship, where he is received by a living actor. When the ship sinks, the Colonel hunts up a real bottle, not a drawing of one, crawls in and pulls the cork in after him, rolls off a real deck into real water and is washed ashore, where he has some extraordinary adventures with cannibals played by living actors.

The Colonel's account of his remarkable experiences is not merely uproariously funny, it is said, but sends the audience away puzzling its brains to figure out how the trick is done.

As the clock strikes twelve on New Year's eve, Viola Dana will have completed a busy year and will be ready for a busier one with Harry Beaumont productions for Metro.

Buddy Messenger, Star of "Boyhood Days"

The first of the Buddy Messenger small town boy stories made by Century Comedies will be released shortly under its final title "Boyhood Days." It was directed by Harry Edwards.

Praise For "Leather Pushers"

President of Universal Acclaims New Witwer Series As Better than First

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, says that "The New Leather Pushers" series of two reelers made by Harry Pollard, with Reginald Denny as star, from the famous prize ring stories by H. C. Witwer, are without exception the best pictures he has ever seen. The entire six of the new series have been received in New York from the coast and have just been shown to the Universal chief. He is said to be exceptionally enthusiastic over them and to have expressed his appreciation for Pollard and Denny's work in glowing terms.

Mr. Laemmle reserved opinion on the series until he had seen each of the six, just as he plans to have Universal's exhibitor patrons reserve judgment on them, and view the entire series before booking them. The last of the series was received in New York early this week. It is called "Joan of Newark."

The Universal chief's comment on "The New Leather Pushers" after he had seen the last of the six was: "These pictures are worth a million dollars. They didn't cost a million, and we won't charge for them on the basis of a million, but they're certainly worth it.

"I'm a case-hardened picture producer, harder to satisfy than any exhibitor or any movie fan I ever met. It takes something like dynamite to get a rise out of me, as far as pictures are concerned. But these pictures simply turn the trick.

"I thought the first series of six 'Leather Pushers' was good. We have received countless letters from men and women, wildly enthusiastic about these pictures. But the new series has far eclipsed the first series."

Dear Mr. Woody:-

I cannot refrain from telling you about the comments that have been made at this theater during the past week on "One Week of Love."

It is rarely that we have so many people go out of their way to personally compliment the management of the theater on the attraction offered them.

"One Week of Love" did the best business that the theater has done for a number of weeks, and candidly, I consider it one of the best produced and one of the most pleasant entertainments that this theater or any theater has been able to present to its patrons for sometime past.

I would be very happy if I thought that I could play fifty-two such pictures every year.

With kind personal regards, I beg to remain

Sincerely yours,

Describes "Hazel From Hollywood" as Satire

In "Hazel From Hollywood," the latest Educational-Christie-Comedy, to be completed, Christie has again turned to satire and travesty, and this time it is the movies themselves which come in for their share of good-natured kidding. Dorothy Devore, as Hazel, is a sort of Merton-of-the-movies type of person, and the action of the comedy takes place in and around a movie studio. The present-day serial "thriller" comes in for most of the satire.

Miss Devore is supported by Henry Murdock, who is being featured in a comedy now in production.

Hodkinson Announces Short Subject Bookings

AN announcement of importance emanates from the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation regarding the widespread demand and popularity of Hodkinson Short Subjects. Bray Romances have been booked by Hugo Riesenfeld of the Rivoli Theatre, New York. The Rivoli has also booked the first Heeza Liar Comedy entitled "Colonel Heeza Liar's Treasure Island."

The report further states that The Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., one of the chain of theatres of the Southern Enterprises, has booked one hundred per cent, the short subject program of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. It is understood that among those booked are:

"Days Afield With Rod and Gun" series, produced by Eltinge F. Warner; "All Star Comedies," produced by C. C. Burr; "Fun From the Press," gleaned from the daily papers by "The Literary Digest"; "Urban's Official Movie Chats" and the Bray Romances.

Pathe News Records Important Events Abroad

In its current issues Nos. 99 and 100, Pathe News demonstrates its enterprise in showing films picturing foreign events which hold wide world significance.

One is the separation of Church and State in the Ottoman Empire. The Caliph Abdul Effendi, recently chosen by the Angora Assembly, is the chief Moslem head of government since 1517 not to hold the title of Sultan and official religious leadership. He is the head of the Civil State only, and therefore, presumably, cannot officially, as heretofore, utilize Mohammedan fanaticism as an engine for victory in war.

A widely significant feature of Pathe News No. 100 are a series of exclusive pictures filmed in Ujina, Japan, showing the popular reception given to the Mikado's soldiers following their withdrawal from Vladivostok, which important Russian city in Siberia they had occupied for four years.

Christie Comedy Wins Praise of Papers

Playing at leading first-run theatres, one of the new Christie Comedies, "Let 'er Run," which is noted for its spectacular horse race, has caused an unusual lot of comment from the dailies.

The Detroit Times stated that the film had more punch and thrill than the average feature dealing with horse races and that the audience at Kunsky's Madison theatre was on edge applauding all through the picture. The Detroit News and Detroit Free Press also made the same statement.

Playing at San Francisco, J. A. Partington of the Granada theatre stated that the effect on the audience was electric and that they cheered for the winner of the race.

Billy Dove and Father Time are conspiring some great things for 1923 under her contract with Metro. She has just completed a leading role in "All the Brothers Were Valiant" and is prepared for even harder work in 1923 than 1922

Selznick News Shows Oregon Fire

Graphic scenes of a fire that destroyed an entire city and drove 3,000 persons from their homes are presented in Selznick News No. 1102. A Selznick news cameraman was one of the first news men on the job after the disaster which virtually wiped out the town of Astoria, Oregon. The city was placed under the guard of marines. Selznick News shows comprehensive views of the extent of the destruction.

As usual there are several good features from Europe. From Ireland there are scenes of the activities of the British troops who are being withdrawn from the army posts in the new Irish Free State. The new pictures from Constantinople show a phase of the relief work done among the children in the war-stricken countries of the Orient by the Near East Relief.

"Slippy McGee" In Month's Releases

ANOTHER "best seller" comes to the screen this month with the release of Oliver Morosco's production, "Slippy McGee," as a First National attraction. The book is by Marie Conway Oemler. Wesley Ruggles directed the screen story which has as its featured players Colleen Moore, Wheeler Oakman and Pat O'Malley. Others in the cast are Sam De Grasse, Edmund Stevens, Edith Yorke and Lloyd Whitlock and a splendid four-footed thespian, Kerry.

Wheeler Oakman plays the title role and those who have had a view of the picture declare he does his best work as the crook who keps out of man's prison of steel bars and granite only to have his soul imprisoned by a pretty girl's smiling innocence.

Novelty Exploitation Service Planned

The motion picture industry is to have its "Novelty Exploitation Clearing House" where those who are interested in cheap souvenir favors for tie-ups with productions will find a specialized service of ideas and an actual stock of suggestions of many and varied specialties. This announcement finds its source in the recent move of the Weshner-Davidson Agency to direct the efforts of the organization exclusively on the gathering, manufacturing and importing of cheap novelties for circulation in the motion picture market.

S. F. Strand Features Florence Vidor

One of the latest booking contracts made with Associated Exhibitors was that of M. L. Markowitz for a week's showing of the Associated feature, Florence Vidor in "Conquering the Woman," in his big Strand theatre in San Francisco. This is the fourth Florence Vidor production for the organization of which Arthur S. Kane is president. The Strand played each of the preceding three pictures in the series for week showings, and, according to Mr. Markowitz, made a good profit on each.

Governors Laud Meighan Picture

"Back Home And Broke" Wins Approval At Special Convention Showing

ENTHUSIASTIC praise for Thomas Meighan's latest Paramount picture, "Back Home and Broke," was the greeting given by the thirty Governors before whom Mr. Meighan showed the picture Friday at the annual conference of Governors at the Greenbrier Hotel, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.

After the performance, which was a regular Broadway show given under the personal direction of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, each of the Governors tendered his personal thanks to Mr. Meighan, to George Ade, the author of the picture, who also attended the performance, and to Paramount for having produced it and having arranged the showing.

Not only did the Governors tell Mr. Meighan personally how much they liked the picture, but fourteen of them sent him a round robin letter in which they commended him for the picture, which they characterized as "delightful, clean and wholesome." The letter was signed by Governors Ephraim F. Morgan of West Virginia, Cary H. Hardee of Florida, E. Lee Trinkle of Virginia, Warren T. McCray of Indiana, Jomes Hartness of Vermont, Albert C. Ritchie of Maryland, D. W. Davis of Idaho, Ben W. Olcott of Oregon, Thomas E. Kilby of Alabama, Channing H. Cox of Massachusetts, Henry J. Allen of Kansas, Cameron Morrison of North Carolina, Sam R. McKelvie of Nebraska, and William D. Denney of Delaware.

Through arrangements made by Mr. Meighan and the Paramount publicity department with Governor Morgan of West Virginia, Dr. Riesenfeld had taken an orchestra of fifteen pieces from the Rivoli Theatre. There was a concert by the orchestra, a news reel, a vocal number of Miss Suzanne Clough, soloist at the Rivoli, the feature picture, a dance by Miss Asya, dancer at the Rivoli and a comedy.

Record Contract Claimed for "Dr. Jack"

In booking "Dr. Jack" last week for all representative theatres in the Philadelphia territory the Stanley Circuit is said to have made its biggest contract so far for any one picture. This statement, made on the day following the signing of the contract, and verified at the Pathe home office, refers both to the number of houses included in the blanket contract and to the amounts stipulated in rentals.

Hiers Is Introduced as Paramount Star

WITH "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," Paramount introduces a new star in the person of Walter Hiers, his entrance into the select circle being in deference to numerous requests from exhibitors as well as in recognition of his pronounced talent as a comedian.

Dana Burnet wrote this story of a necktie salesman who spent his last dime and then found himself embroiled in a life of adventure and romance. Albert Shelby Le Vino wrote the scenario and Wallace Worsley directed. Jacqueline Logan is featured opposite Mr. Hiers and Clarence Burton, George Field and Lucien Littlefield are in the cast.

Eleanor Boardman Gets Goldwyn Lead

Goldwyn production executives have decided upon Eleanor Boardman, the personable young woman selected out of 4,000 New York applicants for a motion picture job, as the principal player in the film version of Rupert Hughes new novel, "Souls for Sale," which the author is now personally directing.

Miss Boardman's promotion to leading roles has been very rapid and is due to her native gift for acting and to her beauty and charm. She had her first important role in another Hughes picture "Gimme!"

There are thirty-three principals in "Souls for Sale;" in addition to Miss Boardman the best known players engaged for the cast are Frank Mayo, Richard Dix, Lew Cody, Barbara La Marr and Mae Busch.

Strongheart Gets Long Run on Coast

Strongheart, the wonder dog, is being shown for the fourth week in "Brawn of the North" in Los Angeles at the Alhambra theatre. ## "Peg O' My Heart" Gets Many Bookings

FIVE HUNDRED AND FOURTEEN bookings of "Peg O' My Heart" in one week are reported by the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation, in New York. So far as is known by the distributing company this evidence of the demand for the screen version of J. Hartley Manner's great play, with the original star, Laurette Taylor, as Peg, represents a record.

Not only is the volume of the bookings significant of the picture's value, but the distribution of the theatres which have contracted for "Peg O' My Heart" is even, demonstrating that interest in this forthcoming Metro release is not sectional, but country-wide.

The picture has recently been completed at the Metro studios in Hollywood, under the direction of King Vidor. The scenario was written by Mary O'Hara, author of the script of Rex Ingram's production of "The Prisoner of Zenda."

"Grandma's Boy" Still Going Strong

It is not alone in the big cities that the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors super-attraction, "Grandma's Boy," has been breaking records. The same thing is happening in many smaller towns and even in villages, thereby making it unanimous, according to the Associated Exhibitors.

"Grandma's Boy" showed recently in M. Kenworthy's Kenworthy theatre, Moscow, Ida., following which the Daily Star-Mirror of that town, commented as follows:

"Attendance records for any kind of theatrical entertainment were smashed by the showing of 'Grandma's Boy' in Moscow. The picture, in its three days' run at the Kenworthy theatre, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, was seen by 1,596 people, or nearly 40 per cent of Moscow's total population. The show was thoroughly enjoyed by packed houses on all three days. The feature comedy production was by far the best comedy seen in Moscow this year."

"Deserted at Altar" Territory Sold

"Deserted at the Altar" and other Phil Goldstone productions have been purchased for the Pittsburgh territory by the newly organized Merit Film Company of Pittsburgh, which is being conducted by W. C. Karrer and Wm. J. Lanagan.

Metro Claims Champion Picture

General Manager Atkinson Contends "Quincy Adams Sawyer" Best of Year

"THE year's all-round champion," is the manner in which William E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, designates the company's screen version of "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

From the standpoints of the merit and reputation of the story, of the excellence of the cast and the skill in production the Metro official this week said he considered the Metro-SL Special Production—scheduled to open in New York at the Capitol theatre December 17—would prove, by returns at the ticket window, the best motion picture attraction available.

Mr. Atkinson's statement from the home offices of Metro, in New York, claims the following items of popular appeal in "Quincy Adams Sawyer":

"The story itself is human, exciting, amusing and unquestionable clean.

"The reputation of the story, as told in the original novel by Charles Felton Pidgin and later retold on the stage, alone is sufficient to attract patronage.

"The cast is of a brillance to require no verbal illumination, comprising Blanche Sweet, Lon Chaney, John Bowers, Barbara La Marr, June Elvidge, Louise Fazenda, Hank Mann, Victor Potel, Billy Franey, Edward Connelly, Gale Henry, Elmo Lincoln, Joseph Dowling and others.

"In both adaptation and direction Metro has delegated the screening to experts especially fitted for the task; the scenario to Bernard McConville, author of the script of 'A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court' and other major attractions; the direction to Clarence G. Badger, whose success with a series of Will Rogers features was pronounced."

"I admit I am prejudiced in favor of 'Quincy Adams Sawyer,'" says Mr. Atkinson, "but I won't admit that I'm prejudiced without cause. When I put myself down as believing that it is the all-round box-office champion of the year, whether it stops from this company's corner or another's, I can bring facts to rationalize my enthusiasm."

"Main Street" In Production

Beaumont Will Direct Feature For Warner Brothers at West Coast Studio

SINCLAIR LEWIS' novel, "Main Street," the last of the seven to be released by the Warner Brothers for the current season, has been placed into production by Sam and Jack Warner. The feature will be made at the Warner coast studios under the direction of Harry Beaumont. With the completion of this production the Warner Brothers will have completed one of the busiest and most active seasons in the history of the organization.

In accordance with the policy of securing the best available screen talent, it is reported that Monte Blue, Harry Meyers and Louise Fazenda were engaged to play prominent roles in the production. Blue and Meyers have been placed under long term contracts. A large number of other screen players are being engaged. Julien Josephson adapted the novel for the screen.

The engagement of Blue, Meyers and Miss Fazenda should be of exceptional interest to exhibitors in that they are credited with having a large following among picture patrons. It is said that they are ideally suited for the parts which have been assigned them in the film.

The engagement of Harry Beaumont to direct "Main Street" brings to light the fact that only a few years ago he established himself as one of the most individual comedy directors when he brought out Bryant Washburn as a star in "Skinner's Dress Suit." Beaumont has been connected with the industry since 1911. He directed for a number of the leading organizations in the industry.

With the completion of "Main Street," the Warner Brothers will immediately concentrate upon the production of eighteen features for the season of 1923-24 at an approximate expenditure of $5,000,000. The coast studios have been enlarged in order to accommodate several companies, and from present indications the entire series will be produced in Hollywood.

Schayer Now Associated with Goldstone

E. Richard Schayer, continuity writer, is now associated with Phil Goldstone, writing the script for Rex (Snowy) Baker's picture titled "Pals." This subject is the first of a series of six dramatic offerings to be made by Goldstone with Baker and his wonder horse "Boomerang" in the featured parts.

Women Tour World for "10 Commandments"

CECIL B. DeMILLE is sending two women half way around the world in search of authentic data for his forthcoming film production of the Ten Commandments for Paramount.

Clare West, who heads Mr. DeMille's costume department, will leave shortly for Paris to gain ideas for gowns to be worn by the Paramount stars in the modern sequences of the production, and Mrs. Florence Meehan, famous traveler and authority on ancient peoples and customs sails immediately on a lengthy tour of Palestine, Arabia, Egypt, India, Java, Ceylon, Thibet and Baluchistan to obtain costumes, properties and historical data on the places actually named in the Old Testament.

England Plans Stunts For "Just Tony"

In connection with the forthcoming release in England of the Fox picture, "Just Tony," with Tom Mix, a clever publicity stunt is being used with the British Animal Aid Society, known as "Our Dumb Friends' League," which is presided over by Lord Lonsdale.

The society is arranging for a public flag day to be held on the release date of "Just Tony," April 9, and the Fox forces have agreed to furnish them with 100,000 small paper flags, on one side of which will be printed the date and the words "Flag Day"—"Our Dumb Friends' League," and on the reverse side the picture of a horse's head, with the words "Just Tony" encircling it.

These flags will be sold on the streets by representatives of the Society in the usual manner that is adopted on flag days. There is also being organized for the evening of the 9th a monster ball in London, at which will be featured a horse bearing the name "Just Tony."

"Hazel from Hollywood" Is Completed

"Hazel From Hollywood," the new Christie comedy, featuring Dorothy Devore, has been completed and Director Scott Sidney is wielding the shears getting the picture ready for release in January through Educational Film Exchange.

This is one of the group of screen satires for which the Christie studios have become famous this year, and it lampoons most of the things about motion pictures which the picture people themselves take delight in kidding.

Campaign Under Way for "The Third Alarm"

THE first shot in the exploitation campaign on "The Third Alarm" was fired last week by the Film Booking Offices of America. This second Emory Johnson production, which is to open at the Astor theatre on Broadway on January 8th, is being heralded by a huge sign adjoining the theatre. Alterations under way on this building caused the boarding up of the ground floor and this advantageous location was immediately acquired by F.B.O.

The world's premiere of "The Third Alarm" will be attended by a brilliant gathering of screen, stage and social leaders of the Metropolis. An elaborate prologue is now being arranged by Andrew J. Cobe, who will be in charge of the presentation. A special feature of the presentation will be a musical score arranged by Frank Cook, musical director of "The Springtime of Youth."

"Notoriety" Ads Win Exhibitor Results

The opening of Weber & North's Will Nigh production, "Notoriety," in the leading first-run theatres of the country affords all those interested in the feature to test the pulling power of the advertising prepared for newspaper use with the feature. When a press book on "Notoriety" was first shown the film men, the superior brand of advertising called forth the highest praise and predictions were freely made that the artistic excellence of the newspaper ads illustrated in the press book would arouse a keen desire on the part of the public to see the picture.

The first runs have already begun on the picture and newspaper ads are now on hand to verify the judgment of the advertising department of Weber & North. Inquiries have been sent to all exhibitors who have thus far played the picture, asking for their opinion as to the drawing power of the newspaper advertising on "Notoriety." Replies speak for themselves.

"The Flirt" Approved by Picture League

The two family films recommended in the September 11 issue of the motion picture bulletin of the National Motion Picture League are both Universal pictures. They are "The Flirt," the Hobart Henley production of Booth Tarkington's novel, for the Universal Jewel release schedule, and "Forsaking All Others," a Universal attraction featuring Colleen Moore and Cullen Landis.

The National Motion Picture League has recommended both of these pictures, both for adults and young people.

The same bulletin recommends as a current history film the International News Reel Corporation's novelty reel, "The Mirror No. 2," which shows the San Francisco fire of 1906.

Syndicate Covers Pathe Stars

Noted Medical Author Analyzes Screen Methods of Comedians for Papers

A REMARKABLE tribute to the creative forces within the motion picture industry written by Dr. I. L. Nascher, author of standard medical works, makes a full Sunday feature page suppplied by the New York Tribune Syndicate to its list of important coast-to-coast newspapers. Among the papers in the east which used the feature on Sunday, December 3, are the Pittsburgh Sunday Post, the Philadelphia Inquirer and the Syracuse Post Standard.

Dr. Nascher's article is illustrated with character photographs of Harold Lloyd, Mildred Davis, his leading lady; Snub Pollard, Lloyd's principal associate in a long list of one-reel comedies, and of Will Rogers in "The Ropin' Fool"—all prominent in current Pathe releases.

Writing on the superior effectiveness of the higher type of screen comedy, Dr. Nascher analyzes methods startlingly like Lloyd's in "Dr. Jack," his latest feature length comedy, which is now reported to be breaking all booking records. But in accounting physiologically for the certainty with which the genuinely creative comedian sustains his audience's laughter interest, the author advances a "ductless gland" theory, of which the editor naturally makes the most—as these page headlines show:

"The Glands That Help You Enjoy the Movies—How the Adrenal Bodies Get Busy When Your Mirth Is Excited, and Why the Film Comedians Must be Careful Not to be too Continuously Funny for Fear of Exhausting These Emotion Controllers."

After quoting from Harold Lloyd's published views on the essence of mirth and what produces it, Dr. Nascher pays this tribute to those who have developed a higher type of screen comedy:

"In recent years a discriminating public has demanded a more intellectual form of comedy, comedy with a plot which requires some intelligence to follow and which does not depend upon the grotesque make-up for its laughs, but upon natural yet funny incidents that occur in the course of the plot. The most successful of the modern film comedians give plays of this character. . . . They depend upon slight mishaps and misadventures, sudden and unexpectedly but not unlikely situations, which in real life would cause a laugh; incongruities which are irrational yet are met with, to furnish the comedy element."

Warner Product Will Carry Trade Mark

Warner Brothers have applied for a patent for a new trade mark which will be used in connection with the productions for this season, and the eighteen scheduled for 1923-24. The trade identification with each production will be "Warner Brothers Classic of the Screen."

According to Harry M. Warner this trademark has been devised primarily to firmly imbue in the minds of the motion-picture public the fact that the Warner features are distinctly individual in production and story value and in excellence of screen players.

Mary Pickford's "Tess" Heavily Booked

MARY PICKFORD'S brand new production of "Tess of the Storm Country," a United Artists Corporation release, will be shown in eighty-four theatres in the Associated Booking Corporation group in New York City and metropolitan district during the Christmas-New Years holiday week and the month of January, with most of the houses opening on various dates between Christmas and New Years.

An extensive co-operative advertising campaign has been mapped out by the executive committees of the A.B.C. which includes a lot of space in New York City dailies.

Goldstone to Start New Subject First of Year

Phil Goldstone announces work will be started the first of the year on the second special, same to be directed by William K. Howard, who also directed "Deserted at the Altar," which is making a successful showing.

Schulberg Picks Two for Spring Release

B. P. SCHULBERG, president of Preferred Pictures is rapidly getting ahead of release schedule and has already picked two subjects for Spring release through the Al Lichtman Corporation. These will be "Mothers - In - Law" and "The Broken Wing." The first will be directed by Louis Gasnier and the latter by Tom Forman.

At present both Gasnier and Forman are busy on subjects to be released in February and March. Gasnier is directing "Poor Men's Wives," an original by Frank Dazey and Agnes Christine Johnston and Forman, "The Girl Who Came Back," by Charles E. Blaney and Samuel Ruskin Golding.

The present line-up will find "Poor Men's Wives" released in February, "The Girl Who Came Back" in March, "Mothers-In-Law" in April and "The Broken Wing" in May.

Franklyn Farnum Subject for Release

Phil Goldstone announces the release the first of the year of "Wolves of the Border," the Franklyn Farnum production which is now being titled.

This is the sixth of a series of Franklyn Farnum pictures produced by Goldstone.

Kane Predicts Further Advance

President of Associated Exhibitors Sees Notable Year Ahead

BASING his optimism partly on the phenomenal advance made by Associated Exhibitors, Inc., since he became president of the organization, not quite ten months ago, Arthur S. Kane is enthusiastic in predicting that the year just ahead will be a notable one for motion pictures.

"No year ever started under more favorable conditions than are prevailing at the present time," said Mr. Kane in a conversation this week. "The answer of the industry to such criticisms as have been launched against it has been the opening of the 1922-23 season with a far greater number of outstanding attractions, photoplays that are meritorious from every point of view and have proved real triumphs, than has marked any previous season.

"There is every reason to believe that the determination to maintain this high standard is fixed and definite. Those of us who know something of the plans of producers, and of features which are being projected, are justified in believing that great attractions will continue to be the rule rather than the exception. In consequence, I feel safe in predicting that, not only will the advance now under way continue, but that it will gather impetus as it progresses. Hence, even were the trend in the entire business world not in the direction of a complete restoration of normal conditions—and it is, unquestionably—we in the motion picture industry would have good reason to greet the new year in a spirit of enthusiasm.

"When I assumed the active direction of Associated Exhibitors, last March, I announced that the policy of the organization was to obtain and release the pick of all independently produced features; that insistence would be placed on the selection of absolutely clean photoplays, not only because of our unyielding preference for products that are wholesome and decent, but also because of the proven superior box office value of films of this character.

"Associated has never swerved an inch from these principles and the results have amply vindicated the conviction expressed at that time. The reception universally accorded 'Grandma's Boy,' Harold Lloyd's first five part comedy, was impressive evidence of the public's reaction to such a policy. This feature scored one of the most notable triumphs in film history.

"During 1923 Associated Exhibitors will traverse the same path it followed in 1922, but its operations will be on a broader scale than ever."

"Penrod" Boys Engaged for Baby Peggy

Practically all the boys who played prominent roles in "Penrod," in which Baby Peggy was loaned to Marshall Neilan for an excellent bit, have been engaged by Julius and Abe Stern to play in Baby Peggy's next Century Special production.

The story by Production Manager Sig Neufeld and Herman Raymaker will be directed by the latter with a very strong supporting cast. Billy Franey recently signed and one of the most noted of old-time comedians plays an important part in this picture.

The boys who have been engaged are Winston Radom, who played the part of Maurice Levy in "Penrod"; Newton Hall, who played the part of the sissy; Kenneth, who played the part of the fat boy; Donald Condon and Verne Winter. Edna Gregory and Joe Moore play the part of the father and mother and Edith Grant, a new Century beauty, plays an ingenue bit.

"Hazel From Hollywood" Described as Satire

In "Hazel From Hollywood," the latest Educational-Christie Comedy to be completed, Christie has again turned to satire and travesty, and this time it is the movies themselves which come in for their share of good-natured kidding. Dorothy Devore, as "Hazel" is a sort of Merton-of-the-movies type of person, and the action of the comedy takes place in and around a movie studio. The present-day serial "thriller" comes in for most of the satire.

Miss Devore is supported by Henry Murdock, who is being featured in a comedy now in production.

"Love's Old Sweet Song" Jan. Release

NORCA PICTURES, Inc., has acquired distribution rights to "Love's Old Sweet Song," by a contract just signed by R. C. Cropper, general manager of Norca Pictures, Inc., and Hopp Hadley of Lund Productions Company. It is scheduled for January release following "Just a Mother," with Isobel Elsom.

"Love's Old Sweet Song" is a title which has had ceaseless publicity for generations. The picture was inspired by the famous old song of James Molloy.

Louis Wolheim, star of the unique stage hit "The Hairy Ape," in which he played the title role is a prominent member of the notable cast to be seen in this picture. Donald Gallaher plays the juvenile lead. Helen Lowell and Helen Weir are also among the recognized artists to appear in this production. Miss Weir, as usual plays an ingenue role.

Big Scenes Shot for "Poor Men's Wives"

Gasnier shot the important ballroom sequence in "Poor Men's Wives" last week at the Schulberg studio in Los Angeles. The entire floor of the studio, which is capable of holding six companies normally, was converted into a roof garden scene for the picture.

Eleven hundred extras were engaged for the scene and all of them dressed in extravagant costumes in keeping with the character of the story. What is believed to be a new record was established when 17,000 amperes of electricity were consumed on the one set—enough electrical current to supply a city of 200,000 with light.

Gasnier found it necessary to have twenty-five assistants to handle the mob and one assistant animal trainer to manage the eight lions and the elephant used in the scene. "Poor Men's Wives" will be distributed by the Al Lichtman Corporation in March.

Lois Wilson Added to Pola Negri Cast

Lois Wilson is the latest as well as the last addition to the stellar cast of "Belle Donna," Pola Negri's first American-made picture which George Fitzmaurice is producing at Paramount's West Coast studio, according to an announcement made by the producer.

Miss Wilson will play the only other feminine role in the story aside from the title role and incidentally, the only character added to Robert Hichens' story as it has been adapted for the screen by Quida Bergere.

With Conway Tearle and Conrad Nagel sharing leading masculine honors and Caude King, Macey Harlem and Robert Schable completing the role of male principals, Lois Wilson's selection for the only remaining role adds one more notable name to the cast.

"Declassee" Suited to Pola Negri

"DECLASSEE," acknowledged by all as the greatest stage play in which Ethel Barrymore ever appeared, its picturization by George Fitzmaurice with Pola Negri as the star is sure to prove a top-notch box-office attraction.

The play was written by Zoe Akins and was presented by Charles Frohman, Inc., at the Empire Theatre, New York, in October, 1919. There it played to standing room only for many months until it was necessary to give over the theatre to another production. Thereafter it played to records in Chicago and other large cities. The role is just the kind best suited to Miss Negri's wonderful dramatic talent. The scenario is by Ouida Bergere.

Laboratory Re-Equipped by Ed Murphy

Ed Murphy who associated himhelf with Tommy Evans several months ago in the Evans Film Laboratories has completed the re-equipment of several of the departments of the laboratory, so that the entire plant now is representative of one of the most complete laboratories in the country.

Mr. Murphy is known for his genius in laboratory operation. During his twenty years experience in this field of the industry he has brought about several advanced innovations that are recognized as big factors in the printing of film.

The Evans Film Mfg. Co. was organized by Tommy Evans some fifteen years ago and at the time of the building of the plant Mr. Murphy was with Mr. Evans. Mr. Murphy is therefore no stranger to the Evans organization or the Evans methods. In fact he and Tommy laid the basic plans on which the plant was to operate and his re-association with Mr. Evans is an evidence of how well his and Mr. Evans' plans have been carried out during the intervening years. To Mr. Murphy it is almost the same as seeing his own plant visualized into a success. It is also evidence of Mr. Evans' intimate knowledge of every branch of the business.

Hodkinson Employs New Selling System

A decided innovation has been inaugurated by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which, from all indications, will revolutionize the usual system of selling which is now in vogue throughout the country.

Beginning with the feature "Heart's Haven," the Hodkinson Advertisement Department, working in conjunction with the Sales Department, has originated a short "Sales-Trailer" which is sent to the branches. In place of sending a print to the theatre for pre-viewing, this reel is taken by the salesmen direct to the theatre and screened for the exhibitor's benefit.

Special Service by Associated

Elaborate Campaign Book Completed for Showing of "Bill of Divorcement"

EXHIBITORS everywhere are to receive a special service in the way of advertising and publicity matter for the exploitation of the Associated Exhibitors feature, "A Bill of Divorcement," starring Constance Binney, which is to be a Christmas Eve release.

A campaign book, larger and containing a greater wealth of material than has been used for any previous feature distributed by this organization, is going out from the publicity department of Associated. In this exploitation ideas are outlined in detail, and a mass of press matter is offered. In addition, a very wide selection of star, scene and advertising cuts, ranging in size from half a column to half a newspaper page, will be at the disposition of exhibitors.

Women are taking an extraordinary interest in the forthcoming release, according to Associated's booking department, where large numbers of inquiries regarding exhibition dates have been received. In New York "A Bill of Divorcement" is well known because of its run as a stage play at the Times Square Theatre during the entire season of 1921-22, and it is no less familiar wherever else in the country the company on tour has appeared and repeated the big metropolitan success.

While not essentially for women, the story carries a special appeal to wives, and the innumerable discussions to which the questions propounded in it have given rise concern them principally. Clemence Dane, the author, has woven into the plot a series of romances whose lure is inescapable, but the first great punch comes over the problem of a wife's duty toward an insane husband.

"Village Blacksmith" Tops List

Picture Based On Longfellow Poem Heads Six New Specials For Fox

"THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH," the super-special production which received the whole-hearted acclaim of New York newspaper critics during its month's run at the Forty-fourth Street theatre, heads the list of the six new specials announced by Fox Film Corporation last week as a supplement to the original group already released for the season of 1922-23.

"The Village Blacksmith" was directed by Jack Ford, whose work in the prologue of "Silver Wings," another of the Fox specials on the present season's schedule, has been the subject of much praise among picture reviewers in New York. Ford is also the director of "The Face on the Barroom Floor," a special included in the group of six.

Throughout the production Mr. Fox is said to have instilled the wholesomeness and classic virtues of the noted poet's work, and to accomplish this selected a cast including the names of some of the screen's most brilliant players. The cast is composed of William Walling, who scores heavily in the role of John Hammond, the village smithy; Virginia Valli, Bessie Love, Dave Butler, Pat Moore, Tully Marshall, Ralph Yeardsley, Virginia True Boardman, George Hackathorne and Lucile Hutton.

What some of the New York critics said of "The Village Blacksmith" is told here in part:

Herald—"Hits the mark for which it was meant as unerringly as though it were aimed by a rifle."

The Journal—"It does for Father what 'Over the Hill' did for Mother. It is a wholesome and interesting story of family life."

The Telegram—"It is as lovely as a New England springtime, and as rugged and strong as the sinews of the blacksmith. It is universal in its appeal."

The Commercial—"The picture is one of the best of the season . . . The Morning World—"So far as we are concerned, William Walling is precisely the person we met some years ago in a very small school house out in Kansas."

Press Opinion on "The Beautiful and Damned"

THE premier showing of "The Beautiful and Damned," the Warner Brothers' release, at the New York Strand last week, brought forth laudatory comments on the part of newspaper critics. Following are quoted some of the press opinions:

Telegram—"Director Seiter has made it an exciting screen version of flappers, high life and fate. The result is brilliant film entertainment."

Mail—"The producers have made an interesting picture."

Sun—"It is realistic, moving and something original for the screen."

World—"'The Beautiful and Damned' is intensely interesting by virtue of its success in clinging to reality."

Eve. Post—"It is a very enjoyable, up-to-date social comedy in syncopated time."

"West Is East" Latest Hallroom Comedy

Anybody who sees the newest Hallroom Boys Comedy will be apt to say, "So, this is China!" for the newest release—number ten of the series—has been titled "West Is East." Harry Cohn produced it, and Al Santell directed it.

Sales Made on Malcolm Strauss "Salome"

Malcolm Strauss' "Salome," the picturization of the famous story which is being distributed by George H. Wiley, Inc., through the independent market, is being eagerly sought by state right buyers, although its selling campaign is hardly under way, according to the Wiley office.

On a two-day trip to Philadelphia and Washington, D. C., this week, George H. Wiley disposed of the exhibition rights of the big special for both those territories. James F. Gill of the Imperial Pictures Corporation of Philadelphia, acquired the Malcolm Strauss "Salome" for the territory embracing Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey.

Federated Film Exchange of Washington, D. C., secured the exclusive distribution rights for District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia. Greater New York and Northern New Jersey have already been closed with Bobby North of Apollo exchange.

"Sherlock Holmes" Cash Goes to Holdups

M. H. Hustler, manager of the T. & D. theatre, Sacramento, Cal., was held up by burglars and relieved of $500, the evening's receipts for the showing of Goldwyn's picture, "Sherlock Holmes."

At ten o'clock every night Mr. Hustler was accustomed to take the evening's receipts to the De Luxe Chocolate Shop. For three nights preceding the robbery three men had entered the candy store shortly before Mr. Hustler and had watched him deposit a bag of money.

On the fourth night they covered him with a revolver just as he opened the safe to deposit the receipts, forced a waitress and four customers into an adjoining room, while another kept passers-by from entering.

New Exploitation for C. B. C. Picture

Two additional ideas for exploiting "Only a Shopgirl" were completed this week by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, and sent out to every territorial holder with suggestions for their use.

The first of these is an aluminum thimble, made up in various sizes so as to fit any finger. On the bottom of it the words "See Only a Shopgirl" are imprinted.

The other exploitation aid just completed is an especially effective herald printed in an attractive blue.

"His Good Name" Ready for Production

"His Good Name" is the title of one of the new all-star productions being initiated at Universal City, in line with a policy of making only the highest-class features for the 1923 market. William Slavens McNutt wrote the story and Collier's published it recently.

A cast of unusual promise is indicated in the first selections, which include Rockcliffe Fellowes, Fritzi Ridgeway, Hayden Stevenson, Buddy Messinger and Frederick Stanton.

Vignola Sees Brighter Future

Expects Splendid Standards of Past Year to Be Exceeded in Next Year

ROBERT G. VIGNOLA, director of Vignola Productions, is among the most optimistic regarding the coming year in the industry. Though he feels that the past year has been one of great achievement he feels that the coming twelve months will be more productive of results. Here is what Mr. Vignola has to say:

"Looking back over the year just ended, I cannot help but feel pride that I am a part of this tremendous influence known as the motion picture screen.

"Notwithstanding that we have been maligned by the yellow journals, dragged through the mire of vilification by certain ladies and gentlemen of constricted mentalities, and otherwise slammed, sloughed and sledged we have managed to keep our heads high, our hearts keen, and progress. The large number of unusually fine pictures that the year 1922 has given to the world amply attest the inevitability of the screen and of its destiny.

"It has proven that it is too big to be kept down, too deeply intrenched in the hearts of the public to be destroyed or even halted in its advancement, only so long as we give our best. The future of the motion picture business depends upon every man and woman who is a part of it, however small that part may be. Nothing can stop it as long as we continue to do our utmost to raise its standards, and we need have no fear of outside influences as long as we have our faith.

"The achievements of the past year having been so stupendous, the question naturally resolves itself: 'How much farther can we go?' This is difficult to answer. No one can foresee with an degree of accuracy what the future will bring in the way of screen development. But at the same time one would be narrow-visioned indeed to say that we have reached anything like perfection or that there isn't room, and much room at that, for improvement.

"If the growth of the past year is any basis of prognostication the year 1923 should see some forward strides in the screen. Just what they will be is hard to say, but the standards will be raised, that's certain."

Ince Sees Boom For Industry

Declares That Coming Season Will See Permanent Establishment Of Screen

THOMAS H. INCE, whose latest feature, "The Hottentot," will be released by First National Christmas Day, believes that the picture industry is in for a boom that will last. In an editorial in the Ince publication, "The Silver Sheet," edited on the coast by Arthur MacLennan, Mr. Ince writes:

"There have been booms in our industry, but just as the boom days of other industries have slumped into days of lessened popularity so have our periods of the unnatural growth fallen away—we had not built a firm foundation and our periods of hectic prosperity could not endure.

"But our day of enduring stabilization is here. This season will see the screen permanently established!

"I am not concerned with the pessimistic reports of 'picture goers' indifference'—'poor productions'—'nothing new in pictures'—'no new faces'—'necessity for mixed programs,' or any one of the countless phrases that are being uttered by individuals who do not appreciate the strides we have made in a few years.

"Such unintelligent mutterings are not consistent with the evidences to the contrary that are everywhere throughout the industry.

"Would business men of proved judgment such as Balaban & Katz launch such a house as the magnificent 'Chicago' theatre in the face of a possible waning popularity? And what of Colonel Fred Levy's new house, 'The Kentucky' at Lexington—the 'Melba' in Dallas—John Kunsky's new Detroit Theatre—Sid Grauman's 'Hollywood,' Gene Roth's 'Granada' in San Francisco—the splendid 'Eastman' in Rochester?

"And throughout America and the civilized world where American-produced pictures are being shown, countless theatres have been launched during the past few months—all dedicated to the exhibition of motion pictures."

Melodrama Is Favored on Broadway

As one sure way of answering the arguments as to whether or not the public wants melodramas the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation this week interviewed the various Broadway legitimate theatre producers with a view to finding out what type of play has proved most consistently successful.

After checking up on length of runs, classification, taking into consideration the stars or leading players and producers, it was found that the successful melodramas exceeded the percentage of successful plays of all other classifications.

Richard Talmadge Completes Production

Phil Goldstone announces the completion of the second Richard Talmadge special, work title, The Fire Eater, directed by Jack Nelson who formerly was with Thomas H. Ince directing Douglas Maclean. The Fire Eater will not be released until February or March

"Hearts Aflame" Fire Scenes in Color

Although painting the lily long has been frowned upon, the idea of reddening the fire, while analagous, seems to have proven effective.

It has been done in the case of the forest fire scenes in the Reginald Barker production, "Hearts Aflame," soon to be released by Metro Pictures Corporation. The picture is presented by Louis B. Meyer.

Black-and-white, Mr. Barker, director of the photoplay, held, could not reproduce worthily the conflagration; and despite the expense of the process and the delay in issuance it caused, he determined upon a full coloring of the fire scenes. They were not tinted, they were colored. Every inch of the many hundred feet of film was retouched by hand, in full and natural colors.

This photoplay is founded upon Harold Titus's novel, "Timber." The scenario was written by J. G. Hawks and L. G. Rigby.

Additional Posters for "One Week of Love"

The Selznick special, "One Week of Love," co-starring Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle, is creating enough enthusiasm around the country to make the big exhibitors who are playing it get out supplementary posters for their engagements, according to the Selznick offices.

From out in Omaha, Nebraska, comes a special block one-sheet which says: "Coming. Not Three Weeks—But Just One Week of Love."

Tia Juana Race Scenes for Snowy Baker Film

Rex (Snowy) Baker and his company have left on location to Calabasas. They also will go to Tia Juana to get the race scenes.

Snowy Baker's first picture, work title, "Pals," will be one of the big spectacular racing stories of the year, featuring Baker and his famous horse, Boomerang.

This will be the first of a series of six pictures which Phil Goldstone will produce. Definite distributing arrangements will be announced later.

Lieber Buys Rights to "Notoriety"

The calibre of Will Nigh's "Notoriety," produced and distributed by L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North, was demonstrated this week when one of the leading exchangemen of the country, H. Lieber, head of the H. Lieber Company of Indianapolis, bought the rights to the super-special for the State of Indiana. Sam Sax, sales manager for L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North, negotiated the deal.

Lieber's purchase of the rights to "Notoriety" sustains the sales record of this high-powered drama. The sales are almost 100 per cent. now and the few territories not yet disposed of are expected to be signed up by Sam Sax in the course of a week or two.

Niblo Going Slowly on "Famous Mrs. Fair"

An indication of the careful attention which Fred Niblo is devoting to the many details of his production, "The Famous Mrs. Fair," is that already nine weeks have elapsed since the first scene was photographed, and there are still several weeks of active shooting to come before the photoplay is actually completed.

"The Famous Mrs. Fair" is the first of a series of Fred Niblo productions presented by Louis B. Mayer and released by Metro. In its cast are Myrtle Stedman, Huntly Gordon, Marguerite De La Motte, Cullen Landis, Carmel Myers, Ward Crane and Helen Ferguson. Charles J. Von Enger is chief photographer.

Charity Benefits $1,500 by "East Is West"

Royalty and the English nobility took charge of the premier of Constance Talmadge in "East is West" at the Marble Arch Pavilion, London, and made this First National attraction a huge success.

Just prior to the first showing of "East is West" The Queen's Hospital for Children of which the Duke of York is President and Queen Alexandra, patron, had issued a plea for funds. So Ralph J. Pugh and the other directors of Associated First National in London offered the entire receipts of the premier showing for the hospital.

The showing netted the hospital over 370 pounds sterling.

Hurd Comedy First Run, Mark-Strand N. Y.

"Railroading," the third picture in the Earl Hurd Comedy series, presented through Educational by C. C. Burr, was given its first run at the Mark-Strand Theatre, New York, week of December 10th.

"One Ol' Cat" and "Fresh Fish," the earlier releases in this group of single reel comedy subjects, combining living subjects with animated drawings, also had their first runs on Broadway.

Sennett Pleased With New Plan

Contract With Allied Producers Gives Him Full Scope For His Talents

"AN opportunity for me to make pictures just as big as I want to make them; to spend just as much money on their production as I want to spend; to produce just as good a picture as I know how to produce and then sell it in an open market on its individual merits as a box-office attraction—that, in brief, is what my recently signed contract with Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation means to me," said Mack Sennett, when asked for an authoritative statement concerning his new releasing affiliations with the organization of which Hiram Abrams is President.

"And to the Allied Producers and Distributors organization the new arrangement means additional product that they know is going to be saleable product," Mr. Sennett went on. "It means that I am going to give them pictures that have had time enough and work enough and money enough spent on them to give them that quality which enables a distributing company to sell every picture it handles on its individual merit.

"'Suzanna,' which is my first release through Allied Producers and Distributors, is a genuine box-office attraction. It is from an original story of youthful love, romance and adventure typical of the early days of southern California. Neither time nor expense was spared to make 'Suzanna' a picture truthfully accurate in all matters pertaining to manners and customs of the time."

Poet Lauds "Sherlock Holmes"

Carl Sandburg Appreciative of Picture and Work of Barrymore

CARL SANDBURG, the poet of the Middle West, author of "Corn Huskers," "Slabs of the Sunburned West" and many other poems, also author of the children's book, "Rootabaga Stories," reviewed for the Chicago Daily News, a Goldwyn picture, "Sherlock Holmes," starring John Barrymore, at the Chicago Theatre. His review was so well reasoned and analytically appreciative that it is reprinted here in part:

"'Sherlock Holmes,' this week's offering at the Chicago theatre is a silversheet version of the Conan Doyle fiction character. The part of the famous detective is taken by John Barrymore. It is a Goldwyn picture directed by Albert Parker. The cast includes Gustave von Seyffertitz, Carol Dempster, Louis Wolheim, Reginald Denny and Robert Schable.

"This is one of those photoplays where it is important to see the beginning first and the end last.

"This is a picture sure to be generally classed among the best of the year. Not only have they taken the greatest figure in the detective story realm and given him plausible and exciting setting; they have also surrounded that figure with foils, matches, contrasts of character."

Margaret Leahy, recently brought here from England by Joseph Schenck for prominent roles in his productions.

Mexico Enthuses Over "Blood and Sand"

Cables received by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, tell of the success scored by "Blood and Sand" on its premiere in Mexico City on December 9.

The showing of "Blood and Sand" followed a bull fight staged in Mexico City and tremendous interest was aroused in the picture, it is said. Inasmuch as some of the scenes for the picture were filmed in Mexico City, the production had been awaited with unusual interest on the part of the motion picture patrons. On Saturday and Sunday the Olimpia, which seats approximately 3,000 persons, was crowded at every showing."

Lighting Equipment for "Rupert"

Over $100,000 worth of lighting equipment is on its way to Los Angeles for use in lighting big sets and street scenes in the Selznick special production, "Rupert of Hentzau."

When the forces under Myron Selznick moved to California last spring they brought a great quantity of studio equipment with them but left practically all lighting fixtures behind.

ADDRESS ALL CORRESPONDENCE TO ORPHEUM THEATRE

December 13th., 1922.

Select Pictures Corporation,
729 Seventh Ave.,
New York, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Woody:

I think it only fair that I advise you that "ONE WEEK OF LOVE" went over very well for us both from an audience and a financial standpoint.

Everybody praised the production highly, and I believe it sets a new standard for Selznick pictures. The acting, photography, story and sets were of a very high standard.

Any exhibitor will make no mistake by booking "ONE WEEK OF LOVE" no matter what kind of a town he is in, small or large. It contains enough thrills to please the roughest kind of an audience and it is certainly high class enough to play the finest theatres in the country.

You are to be congratulated on your new policy of bigger and better productions.

With best wishes,

Yours very truly,

WMS/t

Philadelphia Association Has Special Showing of "The Kentucky Derby"

THE Philadelphia Riders and Drivers Association, one of the leading and most exclusive horse-lovers associations in the country, and the membership of which includes such national figures as President Harding, General Pershing, Herbert Hoover and E. T. Stotesbury, selected "The Kentucky Derby," Universal's Jewel production of the famous Charles T. Dazey melodrama, "The Suburban," as one of the features of the association's annual meeting, held last week in the ballroom of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia.

A few weeks before the Bellevue-Stratford showing, "The Kentucky Derby" was shown privately at the yearly party held at his home, Glen Riddle, Pa., by Samuel H. Riddle, owner of Man o' War.

December 16, 1922.

Mr. J. S. Woody, General Manager,
Select Pictures Corporation,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Woody:

Today marks the conclusion of our run on "ONE WEEK OF LOVE" and I must admit without reservation that in view of the business it did at my Liberty Theatre, it was justly entitled to a longer run, but with other prodnocers pressing me for dates, it was simply a regretable impossibility.

In all sincerity, I don't recall any production that we have played that received more favorable comments and we'll modestly say - we play some of the biggest.

It's an audience picture from every angle and it is very evident that Mr. Selznick kept the box office in mind when he was producing it. Please accept and extend my sincere congratulations to Mr. Selznick, for if "ONE WEEK OF LOVE" is a sample of what you have to offer exhibitors the current season, Mr. Selznick himself and Select are certainly entitled to a full measure of success.

Needless to say, you have my best wishes for the holiday season.

Yours truly,
Sam Harding

"Modern Matrimony" New Title

Finished Print of New Owen Moore Vehicle Is Due Soon in New York

"MODERN MATRIMONY" has been definitely chosen as the title for the next big Selznick picture starring Owen Moore; this is the production which has been finished on the Coast under the working title of "A Dollar Down." The first print, finally cut and titled, is expected at the home offices of the Selznick Company in New York City within the next few days. The picture will be released in the near future.

"Modern Matrimony" is a Victor Heerman production, the story and direction both being by the well known director, who has been responsible for so many of the big successes with Owen Moore as the star which the Selznick Company have recently released.

In nature this latest picture is said to differ to a considerable extent from productions in which Mr. Moore has appeared. It is not a broad farce, but rather the more refined type of comedy. The troubles which are suggested by the title are not troubles between husband and wife but rather the troubles which husband and wife in perfect harmony find confronting them because of modern social and financial conditions.

Almost equally important with Owen Moore in the cast is Alice Lake, who plays the principal feminine role. Miss Lake is a star in her own right, her productions for the Metro Company having established her as a great popular favorite throughout the country. Other members of the cast are Frank Campeau, Mayme Kelso, Kate Lester, Victor Potel and Douglas Carter.

New Carey Picture Early in Year

"Canyon of the Fools" Will Be First F.B.O. Release on Schedule for 1923

HARRY CAREY in a screen version of Richard Matthews Hallet's story, "Canyon of the Fools," will be the first picture on the Film Booking Offices of America release schedule for 1923. This production will be followed by Emory Johnson's "The Third Alarm," which will start its Broadway run at the Astor theatre on January 8th.

"Canyon of the Fools" ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post. Its locale is an almost-deserted mining camp at the head of a canyon, and the adventures of the young wanderer from the East who comes in search of fortune form the bulk of the photoplay. His role is that of a carefree daredevil, blessed with a streak of good humor and a large amount of romance. The story allows a number of thrilling scenes such as a machine gun duel and the crushing of a big dam, which causes a rush of water to flood the mining camp. It is during this sequence that Carey performs an heroic rescue.

Carey's support in this picture is thoroughly capable. Marguerite Clayton plays the leading feminine role, making her California debut after playing in many of the biggest Eastern-made productions. Contrasting with Miss Clayton's blonde type of beauty is Carmen Arselle, an exquisite Latin type. Others in the cast are Fred Stanton, Joseph Harris, Jack Curtis, Charles J. LeMoyne, Vester Pegg, Murdock MacQuarrie and Mignonne Golden, who has appeared in "The Kick-Back," the first F. B. O.-Carey production.

Val Paul, who directed the picture, staged some excellent Mexican street scenes in which more than two hundred people appear. The story was adapted to the screen by John W. Grey and was photographed by William Thornley and Robert DeGrasse.

"Shopgirl" Shown In Newark

C. B. C. Reports Highly Successful Run Despite Lack of Special Effort

"ONLY A SHOPGIRL," second feature on the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation series, proved itself this week a sure-fire box office winner, when it went over the top on box office records at the Strand theatre, in Newark, according to the C. B. C. office.

The feature was booked quietly into the Strand for an entire week's run, starting Friday, December 15, and went in without any special ballyhoos or big advertising that usually accompany a first-run.

Despite the fact that nothing special was done, "Only a Shopgirl" proved itself, according to Manager Louis Rosenthal, a picture in which the public was interested to a remarkable degree—doing a capacity business not only for the opening performances, but continuing to crowd them in right through.

Bobby North, of the Apollo Exchange, through which Greater New York and New Jersey rights to the C. B. C. series of features are handled, had his own representatives at the theatre continuously to get the audience reaction, and says that the people were first attracted by the title "Only a Shopgirl," and the fact that it was one of the old Blaney favorites in a new form—and had shown themselves "sold" by the fine cast which interpreted it, including as it did Estelle Taylor, Mae Busch, Wallace Beery, James Morrison, Tully Marshall, William Scott, Claire Dubrey, and Willard Louis.

best known motion picture and theatrical people in the United States.

The latest achievement of Kahn & Greenfield of this city, is the building of the New Princess theatre at Honolulu. This makes this concern's sixth picture house. Four are in San Francisco and one in its suburb. At the opening of that theatre Gov. W. R. Farrington of Hawaii, said: "There is nothing that I can say that will equal what has been done by the promoters of this enterprise. The success of such ideals, materialized between four walls, will last as long as these walls stand."

Kahn & Greenfield have just announced a change in policy to further improve the entertainment value. They have decided to change their programs at the New Mission and New Fillmore theatres on Mondays, Thursdays and Saturdays, which they state will enable those theatres to show on Saturdays and Sundays some big special attractions.

Southwestern Bulletins

In granting A. J. Urtish a writ of injunction restraining the municipality of Dallas, Texas, from preventing him from constructing a theater in Oak Lawn, a suburb adjacent to the city, Judge Royal R. Watkins made the ruling that a "motion picture house in a district is not injurious to the health or the morals of a community." This ruling was interpreted as being an attack on the city's interpretation of the "ill effects" of a theatre rather than an attack on the validity of the city's building code. The city of Dallas took an appeal from the ruling and will fight the case in the higher courts to a finish.

E. C. Blesi, of the Blesi Realty and Mortgage Company, Dallas, Texas, has interested himself in motion picture producing and is at present organizing a company to make pictures in Dallas. A former director of a company at Los Angeles, Cal., is associated with Mr. Blesi. The company expects to begin making Texas-made pictures some time next year.

Dallas, Texas, exchanges moving into the new Film Exchange Building last week were the American Releasing Corporation and Southwestern Film Corporation.

G. W. Smith, stepfather of Harold Lloyd, film star, was a recent visitor to Electra, Texas, formerly the home of the Lloyd family.

Thos. A. Curran, special representative of the Arrow Film Co., has gone to Denver, Col., after a several weeks' stay in Dallas, Texas, territory.

P. A. Bacon, former advertising man for Ringling Brothers, has established an outdoor advertising business in Dallas, Texas, catering to the theatres and other amusements. He has leased the old stand at 1905 Commerce Street, where he has a big supply of paper and accessories for his business.

The motion picture theatre at Lometa, Texas, was damaged by fire last week, entailing a loss of about $8,000.

Des Moines Flashes

Abe Frankel, who was formerly a stockholder in the Des Moines Theatre Company, of which A. H. Blank is head, has withdrawn his interest in this concern. Mr. Frankel, who had the control of the Rialto theatre, Majestic theatre and Casino theatre, has joined with his stockholders with A. H. Blank, who, in Des Moines controlled the Des Moines, Strand, Garden and Palace theatres. Mr. Frankel in withdrawing from the Des Moines Theatre Company took entire charge of the Casino theatre. He now owns the entire stock of that theatre as well as managing his theatres in Cedar Falls, Creston, Albia and Leon and owning the controlling stock in Riverview Amusement Park. Mr. Frankel has headquarters at 401 in the Iowa Building under the firm name of Frankel Theatres Company.

Violette Midaugh, who is the new cashier at the Strand theatre, Des Moines, has been in the picture business in Minneapolis where she was employed by Ruben and Finkelstein, and as a demonstrator of photoplayers for Dyer Brothers in Minneapolis. She takes the place of Mrs. Lena Richardson, who is now honeymooning in Montana.

Springfield, Ill., Notes

Every theatre in town reports business as being "off" and decidedly so. The week before Christmas is always a lean one, but this year it started in a week ahead to drop. No one expects much now until Christmas week.

"The Sin Flood" failed to draw at the Gaiety. No apparent reason why it fell down. The picture is a splendid one and should have prospered.

Ira Terry is the new organist at the Lyric.

"Nero" did not do as well at the Strand as was expected. Folks seem to be afraid of foreign photoplays, or pictures with a foreign atmosphere.

Thomas Jefferson, seen here in many photoplays, played three days at the Chatterton—Dec. 11, 12 and 13—in "Lightin'."

"The Dangerous Age," aided by a heavy advertising campaign, opened strong at the Princess, Sunday, December 10., Fans gave it a great boost, which helped the picture greatly for the balance of the week.

Howells Cine Equipment Company Supplement

How a Real Live Supply Dealer Is Serving the Industry

Growth and Popularity of Howells' Cine Equipment Co. Due to High Standar d

THIS industry has long felt a dire need for competent, efficient service from the supply dealers and it has only been very recently that a few progressive establishments have realized the benefits to be reaped both by themselves and the theatre through such a policy.

Possibly no better example is to be found than that offered by the Howells Cine Equipment Company, a leading supply house in New York City.

The policy of this company under the leadership of Joseph Hornstein (familiarly known as "Joe") may be expressed by a few phrases, namely, excellent thorough service to every customer, a high business standard and a live competent sales force.

A company of the standards above mentioned is a tangible asset to the entire industry. Too often supply dealers lower the standard of their trade through dubious tactics that not only hurt themselves but also react as a detriment to this entire indusry.

David P. Howell, Pres. Howell Cine Equipment Co.

The Big Five

Prompt Service
Efficient Salesmanship
Good Business Standards
High Quality Merchandise
Thorough Equipped Organization

The Howells Cine Equipment Company began its career in a small way on the same competing basis as hundreds of other supply dealers began and today has grown to a size where it serves an enormous territory. Thirteen salesmen, each equipped with an automobile, comprise the sales force of this organization. Delivery trucks are employed in such numbers as to insure absolute prompt attention and delivery to all requirements of theatres within the territory served by this company.

In a recent interview with the sales manager, "Joe" Hornstein, a few salient characteristics of his business policies and methods were brought forth:

"We believe that the exhibitor wants one supply concern to handle his entire business. We have therefore extended ourselves in every possible manner to serve our customers through employing such high business standards that we eventually win their confidence. In securing the exhibitor's confidence we build up our greatest business asset.

"There is no secret to our rapid expansion and growth during the past few years or to the general popularity our company is now enjoying throughout the entire territories served by our sales force. We simply have made our motto service, high business standards and service again. For instance, any order that is received here at our main office before eleven o'clock is filled and delivered that day. And everyone of our customers know that any order we fill may be relied upon to embody goods of the highest quality.

"Not only do we serve our regular customers in this efficient manner but also in emergencies we have often supplied either in the form of a loan or for permanent installation equipment to theatres where they find it impossible at the last minute to obtain apparatus for some one reason or another.

"That brings to mind one of the rules we enforce with the firmest rigidity, i.e.: Never to fail a customer in the matter of installing or supplying equipment at the specified date.

It appears that "service" is the by-word of the Howells Cine Equipment Company. This impression was furthered during the interview when "Joe" Hornstein discussed an invaluable feature of their service to architects, contractors and exhibitors.

Complete wiring diagrams are drawn up and furnished the architect or contractor for the installation of the electrical equipment.

"Joe" Hornstein, manager of the Howells Cine Equipment Company, N. Y. City

Engineering Recommendations Insure Perfect Installations

Howells' Experts Supply Architects and Contractors with Wiring Diagrams

FREE engineering service to the exhibitor, architect and contractor is an unusual and extremely useful service that is now being rendered by the Engineering Department of the Howells Cine Equipment Company, New York City.

As an illustration, assume that an exhibitor found it advisable to improve his projection department through a thorough remodeling. The question inevitably arises concerning the proper equipment required and the most economical re-design for the projection department layout.

It is in this particular phase of theatre engineering that miscalculations most commonly occur both in the remodeling and installation of equipment and the most economical procedure to be followed.

Engineering service, rendered by experts along these lines, insures to the exhibitor the improvements in his projection and projection department that in the great majority of cases, far more than repays the investment required.

This service rendered by the Howells Cine Equipment Company is rapidly becoming an outstanding feature in the theatre equipment supply business. In the near past a large number of theatres have placed their reliance upon the engineering department of this concern for the remodeling of their projection department.

This engineering staff extends its activities especially to the constructon of new theatres. Here is presented an opportunity for a great beneft to the popularity of the motion picture with the general public. Too often are motion picture palaces created beyond believable conception in their beauty and perfection in every detail excepting one, the projection department. Theatre patrons appreciate the beauties of these structures and also the music that enhances the presentation of the picture. However, it must be strongly borne in mind that the picture itself is the main attraction and to make the picture the main attraction it necessarily must be presented on the screen with the criterion of perfection.

Often the projection department is positioned in the theatre in such a manner prohibiting good projection regardless of the apparatus employed. Or again the design of this department may not permit the necessary facilities for the installation of proper equipment or the operation of same.

In cooperating with the architect, contractor and exhibitor, the engineering department of the Howells Cine Equipment Company insures the correct design and layout for an efficient projection department.

Complete working plans for the position of the port holes, rewind room, ventilating system, etc., are drawn up for each individual theatre under construction that is equipped by this supply company.

Also electrical wiring diagrams are laid out giving the required specifications for the size and type of wiring required, location of the generators or transformers, projection machines, panelboards, etc., thus insuring that every detail of the installation will function in its proper manner the first time it is operated.

The wiring diagrams reproduced on this page were those employed for the Ritz Theatre which installation has only recently been completed by the Howell Cine Equipment Company.

This service rendered the builders, contractors and exhibitors is in line with the general policy of the Howells Cine Equipment in their high class service to the trade.

To fully meet every requirement of the theatre this supply company carries a complete line of apparatus as follows:

Simplex Projectors, Westinghouse Motor Generators, Westinghouse Panel Boards, Dimmers, Gardiner Velvet Gold Fibre Screens, Peerless Automatic Arc Controls, Sunlight Arcs, Raven Haftone Screens, Brenkert Spot Lamps, Fulco Booth Equipment, Snaplite Lenses, Paramont Condensers, National Carbons, Edison Mazda Equipment, Hallberg Economizers, Hallberg Speed Indicators, Radio Mat Slides, Automatic Curtain Control.

Ritz Claridge and Pictorial Theatres Most Recent Installations

THE RITZ, New York City; Claridge, Montclair, N. J., and Pictorial, New York City, are the most recent of the numerous installations the Howells Cine Equipment Company have equipped approximately sixty theatres during the past year.

In making these last installations the Howells Cine Equipment Company ended up their year activities at record breaking speed as these three theatres were all completed within a week.

The Ritz Theatre had apparatus installed as follows: Gardner velvet gold fibre screen, two Simplex projectors, one Westinghouse motor generator set, four Hallberg Economizers, Snaplite projection lenses, Peerless arc control and National carbons.

The new Claridge in Montclair, New Jersey, has also been equipped in a most thorough manner embodying in its projection department a Westinghouse motor generator, Westinghouse transormers, two Automatic Ticket Machines, Snaplite lenses and National carbons.

The Pictorial Theatre has the same equipment installed, namely, Westinghouse motor generator, Raven Screen, Simplex projectors, Snaplite projection lenses and National carbons.

Installations by the Howells Cine Equipment Company have been made in nearly every part of the states of New York and New Jersey. The following is a representative list of theatres which are included in the list of approximately sixty theatres equipped during the past year:

Freeman theatre, Bronx, N. Y.; Kingsbridge theatre, Fordham, N. Y.; Lincoln theatre, Irving, N. Y.; Bellmore theatre, N. Y. City; Park theatre, Rockaway, N. Y.; Arverne theatre, Arverne, N. Y.; Winthrop Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Hub Theatre, Bronx, N. Y.; Castle Theatre, Irvington, N. J.; Capitol Theatre, Bellevelle, N. .; Tivoli Theatre, Roseville, N. J.; Welmont Theatre, Montclair, N. J.; Claridge Theatre, Montclair, N. J.; Cort Theatre, Sommerville, N. J.; Ogden Theatre, Bronx, N. Y.; Victoria Theatre, Ossining, N. Y.; Rialto Theatre, Portchester, N. Y.; Flushing Theatre, Flushing, L. I.; Ritz Theatre, Bronx, N. Y.; Pictorium Theatre, Bronx. N. Y.; Belvedere Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Benson Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Snaplite Lens Sales Increase

The Kollmorgan Optical Company of Brooklyn, N. Y., reports that a greater discrimination is being shown among the exhibitors of the country in the selection of the projection lens and that the higher class lens is now becoming exceedingly popular. The Kollmorgan Company further reports that the increase in the sales of their lenses over that of previous years has been most encouraging.

Radio Mat Invents New Slide

Radio Mat Slide has just placed on the market a new form of slide which may be had in great quantities at a very low price. The slide is not constructed of glass, but the material used has the physical characteristics in its flexible and unbreakable quality of isinglass but at the same time will withstand heat and water. The regular Radio Mat Slide is now being used extensively throughout the country.

Gardiner Screens Have Good Points

The Gardiner Velvet Gold Fibre Screen has been installed by a great many of the theatres which have been equipped by the Howells Cine Equipment Company, particularly those theatres which can best use the reflector type of screen. It is claimed that this screen stands up very well over a long period of use, and that its reflecting characteristics show a very small depreciation.

Westinghouse Makes Many Installations

Westinghouse Electrical and Manufacturing Company, whose products, motor generators, transformers, and so forth, are so well known in this field, have had their equipment installed in every theatre which has been equipped by the Howells Cine Equipment Company. The performance of this type of motor generator has been exceedingly satisfactory and consistent, according to all reports. The sale of this equipment has been steadily increasing from year to year.

Electra Carbons Popular in New York District

The sales of Electra Carbons, according to the report, have been steadily increasing. These carbons are distributed by Hugo Reisinger, who has long been identified with this particular brand of carbons.

On right is a view of the projection room of the Stadium theatre Brooklyn, N. Y., equipped for all emergencies with its two motor generators and A. C. apparatus. The left view shows a projection room which has thorough equipment in every respect. These two theatres were equipped by the Howells Cine Equipment Co.

The profits of your house

THE profits you take out of your house depend upon the highlights you put into your pictures. After all, you have but the one thing to sell—pictures in light. Inferior lighting degrades the best picture in the world to worse than mediocrity; an ordinary good reel, it reduces to a fizzle. The most you give your patrons for their money—what you provide to interest, to amuse, to educate, to thrill—they get through their eyes! And they won't keep coming back to see dark pictures. Poor lighting makes every picture poor, and will work more to keep people out of a theater than any other factor in the industry. The direct road to bright, brilliantly highlighted pictures is—Columbia Projector Carbons.

The value of the picture is in proportion to its lighting

On Direct Current: Columbia Silvertip Combination Carbons present richer color values; and the narrow diameter of the silvertip negative lower permits it to burn to a sharp point, holding the arc steady and also keeping the shadow off the lens and screen.

On Alternating Current: Columbia White Flame A. C. Special Carbons yield a sharp and pure-white light, steady, brilliant, absolutely silent.

Use Columbia Projector Carbons to double the enjoyment of what you are showing and keep the profits of your house up to where they belong.

Structural Engineering Important in Theatre Construction

Owners and Architects Should Engage Only Experts to Layout Design

By H. Robins Burroughs,
Theatre Engineer

STRUCTURAL engineering plays a leading part in theatre construction for the simple reason that the structural steel frame is the backbone of the theatre and therefore carries a great load. Some types of construction are heavier than others and each particular type used has a direct bearing on the amount of steel required to support it. Heavy construction such as stone concrete always involves heavy tonnages of steel, cinder concrete a less amount and still lighter materials reduce the tonnage still further. Hence the first consideration in laying out a structural steel frame is to determine the type of construction to be used in order that the weight to be carried may be approximately obtained and the decision as to the proper type to use should depend largely on its weight. It should be as light as practicable but consistent with local and standard building law requirements.

Difference in Requirements

There is a wide difference in municipal requirements in theatre construction, and especially in arch design. That is, balcony or floor arches. In general, there are several kinds of arches usable for fireproof theatre floors, namely, cinder, concrete, stone concrete, gypsum and a precast porous concrete known as Porete. The latter is the lightest material in weight, averaging about seven pounds per square foot, but is only adaptable to short spans of thirty-two inches. Also being precast, it does not lend itself to the curves and carved surfaces usually found in theatre balcony design. Furthermore, it does not possess fireproofing qualities for supporting beams. This fireproofing quality is not always required. Many building departments accept suspended ceilings as fireproof construction and as practically all theatre ceilings are suspended, other forms of fireproofing are not necessary. This is one important feature that should not be overlooked and in many instances should be taken advantage of.

The usual type of arch construction used in theatres in New York and vicinity is cinder concrete, as required by building laws. That is, cinder concrete reinforced with suitable wire mesh and poured in place so as to entirely envelope all supporting steel work. It is recommended as first-class construction and consequently may be used with impunity.

After the type of floor and roof construction has been carefully determined, the loads are then available for computing the steel design, which should then be studied as to efficiency and economy of layout. Time given to the study of economics in steel design is well spent, provided it is given by the theatre specialist or one experienced in that particular class of work. Owners and architects should engage only experts to do this work for structural designing of even the usual modern theatre is one of the most complex problems known in structural engineering and can be successfully accomplished only by wide and extensive experience in theatre work. Therein frequently lies the fatal error made in numerous cases. The value of specialization is underestimated or overlooked altogether. If a specialist is approached his fee is considered excessive because the results of his services are not visible.

Saves Tons of Steel

The specialist may and probably would save the owner several tons of steel and still give him a better design, but the owner or even the architect does not realize this and apparently there is no means available to prove it. Therefore the competent engineer must rely on his reputation to convince his clients and especially his new ones. This may be properly done. It then behooves the client to accept reputation as being conclusive. In the majority of cases it is conclusive. However, not always. The writer has known a few cases where reputation was founded wholly on a false premise and yet accepted for its full face value. This is something to guard against. An owner or architect should select his engineer with equal care of that of any other professional person.

Let the specialist be selected by and to represent the owner, indirectly or directly through the architect. Let his remuneration come direct or indirect from the owner since the owner is the beneficiary and not the architect. The engineer's fee should be entirely disconnected from the architect's, unless the engineers and architects are associated. This is the ideal combination for maximum economy and efficiency and is strongly recommended.

Complex Problems

In designing the steel work for a theatre, the engineer is confronted with a multiplicity of problems which contain a marked degree of dissimilarity. In point of fact not any two of them are anything near alike. For example, there is the roof design, a problem wholly independent of other parts of the structure. The roof may be designed for several different kinds of construction, namely, cinder concrete, gypsum and Porete, each varying in weight to a high degree. This difference in weight has a marked effect on the tonnage of steel required and should be given due consideration. In cinder concrete work the supporting beams may be spaced, not to exceed eight feet on centers, whereas for gypsum and Porete, the supports are required to be about thirty-inch centers. This increases the amount of steel in the purlins, but due to the lighter weight reduces the amount in the main structure. The writer has used all three types of roof construction and finds that there is some economy in the light weight type. It is more easily erected and presents a workmanlike appearance when completed. Especially for steep roofs the precast light weight slab is particularly practicable. When cinder concrete is used, the roof beams are usually enveloped in concrete and hence fireproofed, whereas with the short span construction this is not obtainable. Therefore the former is better fireproofed and generally considered higher grade work. The writer does not hold this element of additional fireproofing to be essential and considers that the additional cost involved is not justified except for stage roofs. They should be thoroughly fireproofed, and here cinder concrete is strongly recommended as being the most practicable.

The formation or contour of the finished roof line is important. Flat roofs are not economical. The ridge of the roof should be raised so as to provide an economical depth of trusses. A slope of twenty degrees beginning at the ridge to a distance of one-quarter the span from either side is frequently used with a greater pitch of not exceeding forty-five degrees for the end quarters of the span. This will usually permit of a good truss depth in both directions, provided the ceiling line is of the usual design with a center dome, not exceeding in width fifty per cent of the span of the house.

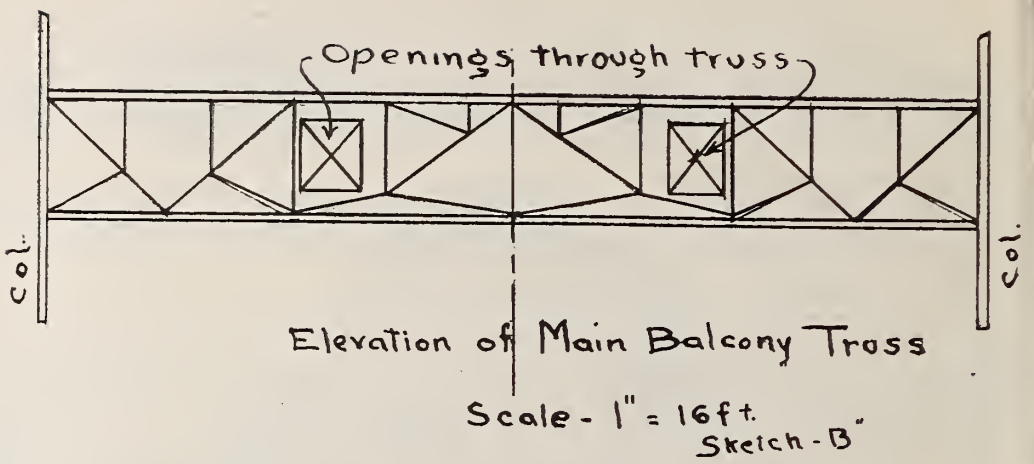
Two columns are usually employed on either side at the boxes to support one of the main roof trusses. This is economical, as it reduces the span. These columns, as well as all truss compressing members, must be securely braced at all panel points. The lack of proper bracing is a common source of weakness and cannot be too strongly emphasized. More failures are due to lack of bracing than from any other cause. A well balanced design may be entirely deficient, due to the omission of certain braces.

Balcony design is another problem. This is the most complex of all and requires a thorough knowledge of balcony construction from every angle in order to obtain best results. First consideration is given to arch construction. The writer has devoted much study to this all-important subject, and has been unable as yet to determine anything more practicable than cinder concrete with certain modifications of design. For example, the balcony stepping may be made in several ways—solid riser and treads supported on fireproofed beams is the heaviest and unquestionably the most durable. A modification of this to the extent of exposing the sides and bottom of beams and using partition blocks for risers, is an improvement, due to lightness of construction and facility of erection. In this case the concrete slab is supported directly on top of steel work. Steel brackets may also be used to build up from the sloping beams, forming a support approximating to the contour of the balcony steppings.

In modern construction it is generally required that the entire balcony be carried on concealed supports, leaving a clear, unobstructed view from the rear of the orchestra floor. This necessitates locating the supporting columns in the side walls of the theatre and spanning the distance between by means of cantilever design. In all cantilever design it is necessary to have proper anchor arms and means of anchorage to counterbalance the cantilevers. In the average theatre with its large, spacious mezzanine, it is not possible to locate these anchor arms in the rear of the balcony. This has made it necessary to invent some method of accomplishing the same results by other means. Generally this condition is met by introducing two diagonal trusses or girders, extending from about the quarter point of the main transverse truss between wall columns to a pier or column also in the side walls, forming an angle of approximately forty-five degrees. These diagonal girders then support two major diagonal cantilever trusses, supporting a front balcony truss of exceptionally shallow dimension, due to the limited depth at this point in the balcony layout. See sketch "A." This depth is usually about five feet and is dependent upon the slope of the balcony steppings and sight lines below. The two converging to a point just in front of the balcony facia.



By using this method the entire space in the rear of the main cross truss is left clear and available for live space. In working out any design along these lines, many minor problems are presented which are not usually easy of solution. For example, there are usually at least two ramps or vomitories leading from the mezzanine to the first cross-over in the balcony. This means that two openings through the main truss must be provided and of sufficient size to comply with the requirements and the law. These openings are generally about five feet wide and eight feet high in the clear. To provide these large clearances through the main truss will not usually be found to be a simple matter. It will require engineering skill to properly work the truss members around these openings so that all conditions of loading will be properly provided for in the most economical manner. The difficulties encountered will depend largely upon the length of span and depth of truss. Sketch "B" shows a diagram of a truss supporting an eighty-eight-foot wide house with columns concealed in the side walls.

For theatres one hundred feet in width it is usually advisable to locate the columns supporting the main balcony truss about five feet inside of the walls, leaving a space on the orchestra floor between the column and the wall of just sufficient width to clear the side aisles. This arrangement kills about three seats on each side of the orchestra, but the loss in return from these seats which are in the rear side of the house is insignificant in comparison with the additional cost of construction involved due to the increased span if these columns are placed in the walls.

There are many things to be considered in designing the structural work for the balcony of a theatre, and they can only be successfully met by extensive experience in this class of work. Details must be fully considered in connection with the design and the two fully kept in mind at all times by the designer.

THEATRE OWNERS know the VALUE of an ATTRACTIVE THEATRE FRONT

THEATRE-OWNERS throughout the country know what store-owners have long realized—that a handsome building is a profitable advertisement—that it attracts passers-by and brings business.

One exhibitor writes: "People can't get inside your theatre without seeing the outside first. They are more apt to go inside when they like the outside." Another owner says: "It's just business sense to have an attractive theatre front." And a third writes: "High-class entertainment within! That's the clear message of my theatre front. Its prosperous-looking exterior promises a good performance—invites the man-on-the-street to go inside."

Picture the Cort Theatre without its enlivening trim and ornament of Terra Cotta. Little question that this theatre owes its character and distinction to this versatile material. Not only does Terra Cotta give unlimited beauty and variety of form, but of color as well. Never fading or changing in texture, no building material better resists fire, weather and time. An occasional washing with soap and water removes all accumulations of dust and dirt, and keeps Terra Cotta fresh and new-looking.

Before you decide what material you will use either for the trim or for the entire facing of your theatre, get the facts about Terra Cotta. We will gladly send you information that may save you time and money. Address National Terra Cotta Society, 19 West 44th Street, New York, N. Y.

Wireless Sending Outfit Increases Patronage One Hundred Per Cent

ANOTHER method of exploitation which has created considerable attention and proved a very good drawing card for the Jacksonville Imperial theatre of the Southern Enterprises, Inc., of Atlanta, Ga., used the popular radio fad.

Manager Albert B. Hill, of the Jacksonville Imperial theatre, writes in that the exploitation marquee display increased his business one hundred per cent over the average for a four-day run.

Quoting Mr. Hill:

"The top of the marquee was turned into the upper part of a ship, showing masts, cabins and quarter-deck. A cut-out figure stood on the quarter-deck scanning the horizon with a pair of glasses. Another figure, a "gob," was seen climbing one of the masts.

A painted drop hanging against the face of the building showed cabins, funnels, railings, windows, etc. The bridge or quarter-deck was built out from this. The masts were poles erected one at each end and guyed in place. Around the outer edge of the marquee were beaverboard deck railings supporting lanterns and life savers in regular fashion.

Now we come to the thing that carried the punch of the whole display and almost stopped traffic several times. Strung between the masts was a wireless aerial with a two-inch spark gap in the center. Mr. Hill had his lighting circuit connected through a Telsa coil, jumping the voltage up to about 30,000 and causing a spark to jump every time the contact was broken. It was worked by a man in the operating room who actually spelled out messages for the benefit of those who knew the code. The noise made by the spark could be heard several blocks and everyone, whether walking or riding, would stop, look and listen and try to figure it out."

In the matter of connecting up such a layout, the details of the construction would depend of course upon the various apparatus that it is most convenient to secure. However, in all probabilities any electrical supply dealer would be in a position to let the exhibitor have a Tesla coil and the necessary wiring and wiring diagram for hooking up this wireless outfit.

Crandall's New Tivoli Progressing

Work on the erection of Crandall's new Tivoli theatre on the north corner of Fourteenth and Park Road, N. W., is in progress. It was designed by Thomas W. Lamb of New York City. Crandall's Tivoli will perhaps be the most beautiful and commodious residential theatre in Washington. It will have a frontage on Fourteenth Street of 220 feet and a Park Road frontage of 109 feet, with a total seating capacity of 2,500 persons. The house will be equipped with a full sized stage capable of accommodating any form of dramatic, operatic or concert attraction. The heating and ventilating systems will be of the latest type, and exits will be provided on three sides of the building in greater number than district regulations require.

The ribbon filament of the large lamp is approximately one-half inch wide, the bulb is one ft. in diameter. This lamp is a product of the General Electric Co. laboratories*

Largest Lamp Ever Made Equivalent of Two Thousand Ordinary Units

THE most spectacular feature of incandescent lamp manufacture was the production of a 30,000 watt unit having a capacity of about 100,000 mean spherical candlepower and being the largest lamp of its kind ever made. Its use up to the present has been confined to experimental motion picture work and it has not yet been developed on a commercial basis.

This lamp is the result of experiments carried on by the Research Laboratory of the General Electric Company.

The accompanying photograph illustrates clearly the tremendous size of this lamp. The small bulb shown in the photograph is the smallest incandescent lamp that is in ordinary use in the household and is rated at 15 watts. The 30,000 watt lamp is equivalent to more than two thousand of these smaller units in the amount of light that it gives off, the bulb being a foot in diameter and is made of specially heated glass to stand the tremendous heat given off by the large filament. The filament of this lamp is different from the ordinary lamp filament in that it is in the shape of a crimped ribbon which solid structure permits a higher temperature to be obtained before reaching the melting point. The writer witnessed this lamp in operation at the recent convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers held at Rochester, in October. This lamp is still in the development stages. In operating same a screen was put up to protect the observers from any possible accident in case the lamp exploded. Also to take care of the tremendous heat given off in the consumption of the 30,000 watts, a reflector with a special fan attachment was used to circulate and draw the air from around the lamp, in this way reducing temperature of the bulb.

The lamp is of such a relatively enormous size that it is impossible to mount it on an ordinary lamp socket. Therefore the connections are made through the two leading-in wires which extend out through where the base of the lamp ordinarily would be.

As stated previously, the use of this lamp to date has been purely experimental and no predictions have been made concerning the possible commercial applications of same though it has been in use in connection with the taking of motion pictures. It will be extremely interesting to watch the development of light sources of this type in connection with the supplementing or replacing of the arc light and Cooper Hewitt light now used in studios.

The limiting characteristic of incandescent lamps for taking motion pictures is commonly known, mainly, that the actinic value of the light given by the incandescent lamp is considerably less than that of the arc or Cooper Hewitt.

A statement received from the General Electric Company advises that considerable effort has been expended to devlop a more satisfactory method for making colored lamps and the use of natural colored glass. The solution seems to have been found in a process of spraying colors on clear glass bulbs. Red, blue, green, yellow and flame tint lamps were produced and extensive tests appear to have demonstrated that the coloring will be practically weatherproof on all Mazda B lamps and the smaller sizes of Mazda C lamps.

T. & D. to Remodel Rialto, Reno

That the T. & D., Jr., corporation intended to make the Rialto theatre the best motion picture house in Reno, was announced recently by Frank Costello, who states upwards of $75,000 will be expended in remodeling. The house has simply been for road shows and has been dark for several weeks at a time. With the equipment for showing pictures installed and the seating capacity enlarged from 1,000 to 1,400, it is figured the house can be opened nightly.—Floyd.

How Fire Started

Here's a letter from a projectionist who realizes the advantages of giving good service to his management.

In the following letter there is brought out an interesting example of how a fire may start even where better than ordinary precautions are taken to insure safety. It simply illustrates that too great precautions against fire are impossible:

Dear Editor:

I must thank you very much for the membership button, card and labels which have caused a little sensation at the Film Agent, in Nairobi. My manager and one of the big directors of the company are quite pleased to see that I am taking an interest in my work; as for the projectionists who come after me will be surprised to see the labels on the film tins, it will encourage them to look after the films in future, and I hope they will join your league. I hope you will keep me well supplied with the labels. I can assure you if any of the projectionists in your country were to receive films in some conditions as I receive them they would have a fit. I get them full of misframes, the beginning and the ending joined upside down; lucky for me we have to rehearse all programmes before exhibiting them to the public, so I am able to mark the bad places and misframes so that after the rehearsal I can get busy and repair them, as, for instance, I received a feature film recently which was a very good subject, but I am sorry to say the projectionist who showed the film before me must have had very tight gate, which ripped most all the sprocket holes. Consequently I had to return same to the agent with a long explanation about the condition of the film. It is a great pity you are so far away from here; I would like to send you some of the lovely misframe joints and bad sprocket holes. I am certain you would like to frame them so all the projectionists may have a chance to see the handiwork of some of the pro's in this country.

Wires Become Shorted

After the show on Friday night, the 6th inst., a cabaret was held in the theatre building. I, as usual, locked up the operator's booth and put all lights out but the main switch was on owing to the cabaret. The wires behind the switchboard in the booth must have short circuited and caused the installation to burn; consequently the switchboard was completely burnt and the booth being fireproof the fire worked its way along the installation till it came in touch with the wood, and then there was a blaze. Luckily the fire was noticed and put out before much damage was done.

I am trying a little patent of my own for washing films which come covered with oil. They can be cleaned at the same time as one inspects the programme. I shall tell you more about it in my next letter, how it works, and give you a full diagram of same, as you know we have no up-to-date methods of working as you have in America.

Very truly yours,
P. J. Gallagher, No. 1865,

Monday, December 11, 1922, at 11.30 A. M., a descriptive lecture on "Optics," as applied to motion picture projection, illustrated by stereopticon slides, was given at the headquarters of the International Projection Association, Inc., 437 East 145th Street, New York City. The lecturer was E. A. Taylor, optical engineer of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Co.

Laboratory Report

The following report has been received from the Research Laboratories of the General Electric Company concerning a new development in connection with the apparatus for use with the incandescent lamp projection equipment.

An improvement in the projection of motion pictures using the Mazda lamp as a light source was made possible by the introduction of a split condenser. Sufficient glass was taken from the center of the condenser to make the two halves slightly offset the projection of the filament images, thereby imposing on the curtain the bright bands of one field on the dark bands of the other. The resultant field is evenly illuminated and the intensity increased by 50 per cent.

Undoubtedly more specific information will be obtainable at a later date.

Local 181, Motion Picture Operators' Protective Union, with headquarters at Baltimore, has named the following officers for the ensuing year: G. Kingston Howard, re-elected president; William George, Edward Canby and Charles Dotson, vice-presidents; N. Basil Morgan, secretary; Joseph Quade, treasurer; Arthur Stewart, Charles Grauling and Austin Bradshaw, trustees.

Ventilation Important

Possibly there is no more disagreeable condition existing in the projection rooms of the theatres throughout the country than that caused by poor venilation. Ventilation is an absolute essential in the motion picture theatre projection department, both from the standpoint of physical comfort and health, and it is therefore to every projectionist's advantage to promote the proper ventilation for his department.

Many of the small "booths" have no outlet excepting possibly a small hole through the top of the "booth" or a small window to circulate the air and clear out the carbon fumes and dust. In these "booths" the arc houses on the projection machines are not usually connected with any flues to carry out the fumes and heat which therefore dissipate into the room itself, causing an atmosphere which tends to take the incentive away for good work along with the injuries resultant in permitting the carbon dust to settle on the various mechanisms of the machine and in general making the booth disagreeably dirty.

This department of the News has previously published recommendations for the ventilation of the projection rooms and recommends that especial study should be given this subject. For proper ventilation the requirements are relatively simple in the majority of cases where direct ventilation from the projection department to the exterior is possible. From the flues of the lamp house of the projection machine direct piping should run to the outlet for the ventilation.

To insure good circulation of the air, it is necessary to employ forced ventilation in the form of a small suction fan. Various states specify regulations concerning the ventilation of the projection room which in most instances insure comparatively satisfactory results. However, great improvements in the majority of projection departments can be made along these lines. With the proper ventilating installation the work of the projectionist will be made a great deal pleasanter.

Change for Labels

We have received a letter from W. L. Straun, who is recommending changes in our N. A. M. L. labels, and in so doing has explained why he believes this new form to be of advantage over the ones in present use.

Gentlemen:

I guess you think that I do not appreciate your information about the condenser lens that I wrote you about some time ago, but I have been a little overworked for the past three or four weeks and have not had time to write any one. I received your letter concerning the lens breakage and want to thank you for same, as I had already looked over every detail that you mentioned except this one (see that the lens is not too tight so as to allow for expansion of heat). I looked into this matter and found that this was where my trouble was, and have not had any more of said trouble.

I also received some of your new film can labels, and wish to say that I also appreciated getting them and also think that they are far better than the ones used heretofore, as they explain exactly what our GREAT LEAGUE is trying to do for the motion picture industry. But herewith enclosed is a sketch of a label that I have designed all by myself, and am sending to you for your criticism. I think that a label like this will be of a great advantage to both the man using them and the man that happens to find them in the can later, as you know when the film gets back to the exchange it does not always go out again in the same box or can. Reason No. 1: the man using said label, if properly filled in, will explain the exact condition of film when he received it and also the correct condition of film when it leaves him. Reason No. 2: The man receiving a can with film label with the title not corresponding with the picture shipped in said can will know when he looks at the title on label that it does not refer to film he is running at all, and that it was put there for a film previously used in that can.

Now if you think this worth while you may send me a few when they are ready for use. I would also like to say that I am more in favor of the N. A. M. L. than ever each time that I receive the News and go over the Forum. Just got my December 9th issue and looked over the Forum. I think that I can give our brother, Roland M. Archibald, the information that he wants concerning his fuse trouble, and will take great pleasure in writing to him tomorrow, as I was worried with the same kind of trouble when I first came to this theatre.

Well, as I guess I have already written too much and that it will go to the trash basket, I will try and stop for this time, although I could write several little items that I think would do good to some of the other brothers, and will try and do so before long.

Again thanking you for the new labels and the valuable information that you sent me concerning my condenser lens breakage, I am

Yours for better projection,
W. L. Strawn,

Send in Your Discussions

Dear Editor:

I am enclosing 50 cents for membership in the N. A. M. L. for my assistant and myself. Please send our membership buttons and cards as soon as convenient.

I have always endeavored to send film back to the exchanges in a better condition than when I received it. I am running second-run pictures and some of them are in pretty bad shape. I have the most trouble with punch-holes.

I think the League is a very good thing and the time will soon come when all real projectionists will belong to it; then we will have less trouble and better pictures.

Very truly,
Adrian M. Fisher,
Roseburg, Oregon.

Gentlemen:

In looking over a copy of the News I ran across one of your application blanks which I have filled out and attached to this letter. I have heard very much about your League and have had intentions of joining but it always escaped my mind until I saw your page in the News. Enclosed is my 25c. for which please send me membership button.

Very truly yours,

AS a motion picture projectionist who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the projection-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in reasonably good condition, according to conditions of film when received. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother projectionists and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Four Assistants

guarding every source of danger are placed entirely within your projector in electrical connection with the guard on the lamphouse and let not a single condition pass that would cause the film to become ignited or mechanically damaged.

Automatic Change-Over Connection

handling the dowser and motor of both machines simultaneously by the mere raising of the dowser on either machine is so perfect in action that double images and white or dark screens are absolutely eliminated.

Self-Acting Switch

cuts off the current from motor and dowser when lamphouse is moved into position for slides and automatically connects both up when moved back for film projection, leaving nothing to remember and nothing to forget.

In a Class to Itself

Skilfully constructed on a scientific principle, different in design and operation from anything ever before devised. Built to fully protect and serve the most exacting exhibitor with a fortune at stake, to whom the difference between a few dollars and a few hundred dollars is not a consideration if that difference supplies real protection.

Electric Dowser and Motor Control

(shown with cover removed) automatically intercepts light beam at the lamphouse and stops motor when contact is made by any of the attachments installed in the projector. Motor switch is actuated by the movement of the dowser.

Upper Loop Guard

Roller is drawn down on contact when loop above the aperture is lost due to any cause, thus fully protecting one of the most dangerous conditions that cannot be prevented when sprocket holes are torn out.

Lower Loop Guard and Film Roller

Lever makes contact only when loop is entirely lost and raises guide roller off of sprocket. Film Roller falls and makes contact when film breaks, separates or runs out, or when take up fails to operate properly.

Governer Attachment

makes contact when driving mechanism slows down below safe speed from any cause such as belt breaking, slipping or throwing off, motor stopping, mechanism binding, etc. This is adjustable to any desired drop in speed.

T. & D. Grand, Reno, Reopens With Added Equipment and Remodeling

The Grand theatre, one of the three play houses owned by the T. & D., Junior Corporation, re-opened its doors tonight and showed to capacity houses at both performances, after being closed for three weeks, during which it was remodeled at a cost of $10,000.

Beginning at the entrance the entire building was overhauled. A marquee, brilliantly lighted, extends the entire width of the sidewalk, and directly above it and a part of it an electric sign flashes forth the name of the play and star of the screen to be seen each night. Above this is the most brilliant sign in the city, one more than twelve feet high, spelling the word "Grand," and just beneath this in colored lights, horizontal, the word "Theatre."

The lobby has been enlarged and is finished in blue and gold with a blending of bronze, which is the color scheme throughout the house. The ticket office has been placed in the center, and on either side the arrangements are such that displays of actors and scenes are shown to advantage. Directly back of the lobby is a commodious rest room, which not only furnishes a nice place for putting on wraps, but also blocks any drafts or wind from the interior when the doors are swung open.

Not only were the theatre seats cushioned, backs and seats, but the aisles have been heavily carpeted. Boxes were installed on either side sufficiently large to accommodate small theatre parties.

The blue, bronze and gold interior is greatly enhanced by panel pictures on each side of the theatre, lighted by indirect lights hidden beneath each panel.

The lighting system is one of the most costly features of the remodeling. A total of 485 lights are used. The theatre proper is lighted by the indirect system, beautiful chandeliers being suspended from the ceiling. Red, green and blue lights are used for stage effects. These are operated by a series of switches so that the colors may be blended and different effects caused when they are thrown on the screen when some particular coloring is required. They are also used for spot light effect for special features, such as musical numbers, short skits by vaudeville artists or local singers, dancers, etc., which the T. & D., Jr., company finds worth-while attractions in filling its theatres.

Plans for the remodeling were drawn by Robert Powell of Los Angeles, a specialist in theatre architecture, who has drawn plans for remodeling 127 theatres during the past two years, besides preparing plans for many new ones.

Frank Costello, manager of the T. & D. theatres, announces that the remodeling of the Grand theatre forms but a part of the plans of the T. & D. corporation, which will expend upward of $30,000 in remodeling its two other theatres.

Fairbanks Likes High Intensity

The Hollywood was opened with the world's premier of Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood." Fairbanks saw one reel with the high intensity and one with the ordinary lamp, and wanted to know what was the matter with the latter. The result was that Power's G. E. High Intensity Arc Lamps have been permanently installed in this theatre.

A good illusration of remodeling. At a cost of approximately $10,000 the manager of the Grand theatre, Reno, Nevada, converted the original theatre into this modern house

Wells Amusement Company Open New Norva Theatre, Norfolk, Va.

LOCATED midway between Market and Freemason on the east side of Granby Street, the Norva is in the business heart of Norfolk. At the rear it runs the length of the block to Monticello Avenue, occupying a lot 85 feet on the front, and 150 feet in depth. The front elevation is two and a half stories, while the auditorium wall at the rear is apparently four stories above the street. An elaborate markee with illuminated porcelain lettering, enables changing of program announcements.

Unusual appearance of the Indiana theatre, Terre Haute, Ind., lighted for the night show

Art glass lights, ten in number, unique in design, illuminate the second story portion of the building front. These are 500 watt lamps, very large, and are reinforced by a row of smaller lights under the eaves of the roof.

Tan-colored terra cotta is the motif of the exterior of the building, which, says Mr. Lewis, is fireproof throughout. The ticket booth is near the street entrance, leaving sixty-foot passages back through the lobby to the foyer. Gray marble wainscoat in the lobby, plaster friezes in shades varying from gold and brown to old rose and ivory, consisting of allegorical dancing Cupids unrolling reels of film, the graces, sphinx, masques, etc., extend into the house and are brought into the proscenium decorative scheme.

Adjoining the foyer is the orchestra rear promenade, at either side of which wind marble stairs to the mezzanine. Bric-a-brac and five-foot high urns form part of the foyer decorative setting. Foyer lighting is from an art glass cave in a light well, round and oval dome lights, in lead frames, like embossed grills being used. Offices of Manager W. S. Wilder and staff are on the mezzanine as are the women's rest rooms. Chairs, lounges, and rugs were especially designed, upholstery and rugs being harmonious with the prevalent color scheme. The smoking room for men is located in the basement.

The auditorium is of the European type, with loges and boxes in front of the balcony, the three tiers of boxes of course being on the sides. Entrance is from four doorways on the mezzanine. Two great pillars, forming the proscenium arch, are the only such supports in the house, there being no obstruction to the view in the seating area. There are three banks of seats in the orchestra, seating 1,000, while the balcony seats rise from the rear promenade, above the balcony loge promenade. Seats in the balcony accommodate another thousand spectators. Wicker chairs in loges and boxes have upholstered arms, while wooden chairs in the orchestra are upholstered in leather.

An elaborate lighting system has been successfully developed in the Norva. In the roof above auditorium and orchestra is a huge dome light of art glass, and two caves, one lighting a portion of the mezzanine floor and the foyer, either side of which are parts of the mezzanine promenade. The indirect or concealed system of lighting is employed extensively, there being 5,500 light sockets in the Norva, extending along the eaves of each room, from the lobby by way of the foyer into the auditorium proper, with its great dome light, and 24 lesser dome lights, as well as the two caves. Amber, blue and rose lighting effects and combinations are possible by three electric circuits. The Cutler-Hammer dimming apparatus is used, and control of the entire system is obtained from the switchboard. Two projection machines, operated by 110-ampere Westinghouse motor generator, and an emergency circuit, when generator is out. The projectors are the largest in the South, focusing 130 feet to the screen. The screen is a special weave, 16 x 22 feet. A special make of lens and a 100-ampere Kleigel spotlight lamp, color wheel, dissolving, complete the booth fixtures. A thirty horsepower motor and standpipe controls the sprinkler equipment through the house. The heating plant is in two units. Intercommunicating telephones, linked to the city dial automatic system, eliminate the need of central and PBX. operators. The ticket booth has two automatic ticket selling cash register machines. There is a triple manual 48-stop Robert Morton organ, presided over by Charles J. Posse, organ chambers being on each side of proscenium. The stage is thirty-seven feet deep, and by dropping an apron over the pit a regular traveling show could be booked.
